Wrong Appellation

We call a foolish person a "goose" probably for the same reason we call a smart person "a wise old owl." The owl is, in fact, one of the stupidest of birds, while the goose is in reality one of the smartest. The goose can find its way home across a hundred miles of country and it can be trained to do tricks as easily as any other bird or animal.

Nation's Cotton Crop

A SALAD PUZZLE SOLVED!

MANY a housewife has had occasion to say with a sigh, "I've tried all sorts of salads to tempt my husband but he won't eat them. And I know he should, for the fruits and vegetables are really necessary for health."

Sometimes, let us whisper it, the reason hubby won't eat salads is just because he is stubborn. But more often it is because the salads are so flavorless. The obvious remedy is to use more highly flavored ingredients. As an old colored mammy used to say, "Let's jes' jump 'er up a bit."

Pineapple Hath Charms

And what could be a better way to "jump up" a salad than by the use of full flavored, rich Hawaiian pineapple. Certainly a salad which contains this delicious fruit will captivate the heart of even the most obdurate salad hater.

Red Star Salad: Drain the syrup from a can of pineapple tid-bits. Cut an equal quantity of tender celery into small pieces, sprinkle with lemon juice, and stand in a cool place until chilled. Add one-fourth cup of blanched and chopped almonds or pistachio nuts to a cupful of mayonnaise dressing and use sufficient dressing to mix thoroughly with the celery and pineapple. Serve on lettuce leaves and garnish with pimientos cut into small star shapes.

From the Tropics

Chicken and Pineapple Salad: Combine one cup drained Hawaiian pineapple tid-bits, two cups diced cooked chicken, three-fourths cup diced celery, and one-third cup mayonnaise dressing. Arrange in lettuce cups, top with mayonnaise, and garnish with ripe olives.

Tropical Salad: Cut six slices of pineapple in halves. Pare an avocado, cut in halves lengthwise, remove stone, and cut halves crosswise into half moon shapes. Arrange on a bed of romaine, alternating halves of pineapple and avocado. Serve with lime dressing made by substituting lime juice for lemon juice in a standard French dressing.

Pineapple and Cream Cheese Salad: Drain twelve Hawaiian pineapple slices and dry thoroughly. Combine one and one-fourth cups cream cheese, two tablespoons cream, one-half teaspoon salt, a dash of pepper and paprika, and three drops onion juice; beat until smooth and creamy. Spread one-eighth inch thick on each slice of pineapple. Then press every two slices of pineapple closely together. Chill well, cut in wedge shapes and pile on crisp lettuce. Pour over it French dressing and serve with mayonnaise. As a variation, add one tablespoon Roquefort cheese or two tablespoons of finely chopped chives to the cream cheese, in place of onion juice.

Oranges and other citrus fruits are particularly good source of vitamin C.

If waffles stick, don't grease the iron, but add two extra tablespoons of melted butter to the waffle batter. Vitamin B, which occurs abundantly in vegetables, fruits, milk, and wholegrained cereals, stimulates the appetite. This vitamin is lacking in sugar, fats, and highly refined cereals.

Gulf Tides Far-Reaching
Tides from the Gulf of Mexico affect the waters of the Bayou Mississippi, in Louisiana, more than 100 miles upstream, says the Dearborn Independent. The bayou is 90 feet deep at a point 70 miles from its mouth, while the elevation of its banks at that point is only 19 feet.

Uncle Eben
"Do trouble you makes for somebody else," said Uncle Eben, "is allig liable to turn up in yuh own affairs an' make you wish you hadn't made so good a job of it."—Washington Star.

Corn Aid to Civilization
When nomadic peoples first began to grow their food and store it, instead of going out to hunt each day's rations or pick them in the convenient forests, they had to settle down near their fields and devote their spare time to some of the finer arts of life. Thus civilization advanced hand in hand with the cultivation of corn.

Rights of Indigents
The Post Office department says that the sealed mail of persons living in a county home is as fully protected from unlawful opening as the mail of any other citizen. The more fact that the inmates are so unfortunate as to have been compelled to seek shelter in an institution maintained for the indigent gives the superintendent no license to interfere with their letters.

Paris Latin Quarter
The Latin quarter of Paris is the section of the city in which the University of Paris is situated. Education in the university was formerly given in Latin, and the students used to go about the town singing their songs in Latin, thus giving rise to the name which persists to the present day.
