Oregon leads in the number of chinese pheasants raised and liberated in the United States, according to the American Game Protective Association. Last year Oregon's game department raised and liberated 5,000 more chinese pheasants than were freed in New York, the second state. Oregon's state game commission is the only one in the nation that successfully raises Hungarian pheasants. Last year the commission liberated more wild turkeys, wild ducks and guinea fowl than were turned free in any other state.

place. There were a great many other depositors crowding about the window and lines were extending into the street. But being a smart fellow even at that time I dashed around to a private entrance on a side street and safely deposited my golden hoard. The next day I learned that the crowds were caused by a run on the bank which was reported to be a little baggy at the knees financially. Now I send my pay check to my Aunt Amanda.

GINGERBREAD HOUSE BUILT IN JERSEY TOWN

which the Giant was brewing his dinner from the bones of his victims when Jack slew him. The fire is there and the flame colored walls are studded with bones. It is truly a place of wonderful scenes, a complete transportation into fairyland ### for the mothers and children to whom it is freely open every day.

The purpose of the Gingerbread House, is frankly, to advertise the particular food products which its originator makes. But there is no suggestion of advertising about the building or its contents. It is something new in American art and architecture, and may prove to be the beginning of a new movement in this country.

One of the principal complaints which European visitors make about America is that our buildings are too colorless and too much alike. The main of any American town looks just like the main street of almost every other American town. They all try to look like big cities, more or less. Design and color are standardized and there is little life or variety in the scene.

Every building which departs from those standards, if it does so artistically and in harmony with its surrounding, help to make America more picturesque and that is what the Gingerbread House at Hamburg is doing.
