Disease Not Always Cause Of Calf Deaths

Loss of calves during winter months does not always mean they are diseased, according to Dr. Glenn B. Rea, state veterinarian, Oregon Department of Agriculture.

Rea said knowledgeable livestockmen and area veterinarians report that many of these calf losses could be avoided by proper diet and good housing. He said malnutrition and dehydration are often the cause for the loss.

Discussing the calf losses reported this time of year, Dr. George Coburn, of the livestock disease control section of the department, pointed out that animals in the western section of the state are not used to cold weather and calves need special care in near freezing weather.

And, the older calf can be a problem as well as the very young calf. The critical time for the older calf comes at two to three months of age when he begins to switch from a liquid type of food and calf meal to grass, hay, and straw.

Coburn said that if the calf is to remain in good health it is important that it be given access to all the water it requires so that it will help digest the solid food. He pointed out that the water needs to be warmed during the very cold weather or the calf may refuse it and dehydration begin.

Coburn said insufficient water or water that is too cold could cause the calf to turn down even the best food, which will result in malnutrition.

SOC Primes For First Ski Meet

Practice sessions for Southern Oregon College's newest intercollegiate sport, skiing, got underway last week, according to coach Dan Bulkley.

Bulkley reported a turnout of nine prospects for the first session Monday. The coach also said he would split coaching duties with Buck Martin, head of the Mt. Ashland Ski School. Martin will handle the Alpine events (Slalom, Giant Slalom, and Downhill) and Bulkley will take the Cross Country events.

First action for the new Red Raider skiing team will be Jan. 29-30 in the University of Oregon Invitational at Bend. The team's only home appearance will be in the Skiasta on Feb. 26. "We hope to schedule at least one other home meet," Bulkley reported.

Entering the Alpine events will be Corky Barrell, Joe Humasti, Ray Richter, Bob Reichers, Michael Scripter, John Thomas, Ken Whitehouse and Bjarne Jensen. Jensen, Reichers, Thomas, Whitehouse and Bob Ducich will participate in the Cross Country.

"This is our first year with skiing as an intercollegiate sport and we don't expect great things," Bulkley said. "We hope to get a good start at developing a sound basis for a skiing program. Most of the boys have been working out since October and we had one practice run at Shasta before the fall term finals."

Following the Oregon meet, the Raiders will take part in the Reno Winter Carnival Feb. 12. On March 11 through 13, SOC will participate in the Far West Intercollegiate meet at Squaw Valley and on March 19-20 the Raiders will meet the College of the Siskiyous and Chico State at Mt. Shasta.
