KLAMATH RIVER

The Klamath river rises in Upper Klamath lake, Oregon, near Klamath Falls, at an elevation of 4,412 feet above sea level. Flowing in a south-westerly direction it crosses into California, at a point about 36 miles below its source. Nine miles further down stream is Copco where our Copco One generating station is located. About a mile below this is Copco Two. From Copco this river continues in a southwesterly direction for 20 miles, then westerly for 60 miles, then swings to the south for 65 miles, then makes an abrupt turn to the north in which direction it flows for 40 miles, emptying into the ocean at Requa. Its total length is approximately 220 miles. The total drainage area above Copco is 3,566 square miles. Elevations range from 2500 feet at Copco One power house to about 10,000 feet at various summits. The drainage area is mostly composed of volcanic rock, lava, pumice and ash—material ideally suited for storing the annual rainfall. Emerging in the form of springs the water feeds the streams which flow into the Klamath river. From Keno, a short distance from Klamath Falls, this river falls from 100 to 200 feet per mile. Like the Columbia, the Klamath river rises east of the Cascades and empties west of them. Thus, like the Columbia, it drains both eastern and western slopes of this watershed.

THE ROGUE RIVER

The Rogue river (the main stream of it) rises in volcanic country on the west slope of the mountains surrounding Crater lake, at an elevation of 6240 feet above sea level. The water feeding it at its source comes from springs possibly supplied from Crater lake. This river takes a general course westerly and discharges into the ocean near Gold Beach, Oregon. Its total length is about 175 miles. The elevations within its drainage basin above Prospect where our generating plant of the same name is located, range from 2500 to 9760 feet the highest elevation being Mt. McLaughlin. The drainage area above Gold Ray, where one of the company's power plants is located, contains 2020 square miles. Here, too, as in the drainage basin of the Klamath, the rocks are volcanic and the area is almost completely covered with timber. Gold Ray is about 35 miles below Prospect.

THE UMPQUA

The Umpqua river is formed by the North and South Umpqua rivers which come together near Roseburg, Oregon. The North Umpqua rises in Marder lake near the summit of the Cascade range at an elevation of over 6000 feet. The South Umpqua (composed of two forks) rises on the northern slope of Abbott Butte. The combined rivers, draining some 4000 square miles, enter the Pacific at Winchester Bay. The feeder streams flow through narrow valleys in rough and mountainous country. Surrounding snow-capped peaks are from 8000 to 10,000 feet high. The North Umpqua falls more than 3600 feet in the 75 miles from Diamond lake to Roseburg. The lower stretch of the river formed by the North and South Umpqua rivers, the Umpqua proper, falls but 485 feet between Roseburg and the ocean, a distance of about 125 miles. The total length of this river is about 200 miles, and it flows through one of the most densely forested regions in the United States.

A WONDERFUL COUNTRY

These three rivers, the Klamath, Rogue and Umpqua, and their tributaries, make this a wonderfully well watered land, and considered in their relation to agriculture and power developed and potential, make it one of the most favored regions in North America for man to put forth effort and realize on results.—The Volt.

Evergreens for Grounds

One of the most delicately graceful of the evergreens is the Carolina hemlock, and for the small house the Sargent's weeping hemlock, with broad flat top and pendant foliage, should be used as specimen plants where much inferior materials are now used. For some places firs and spruces may be too large, but the best fir, the Nikko silver fir, is a magnificent specimen of evergreen.

For spruces most builders want Colorado blue spruce. It is a beautiful little tree and easily grown. There are one or two pines suitable for the small place, especially the Swiss stone pine, a compact, roundish little tree. The knee pine, dwarf and flat topped, is also fine for the small place.

Value of Shade Trees

The agents of "progress" will argue that there is no difference between the shade cast by a brick wall and that cast by a living, growing tree. But there is a vast difference, as science has demonstrated. One average tree in a single season throws into the air through its leaves 500 barrels of water. Shade from a tree, therefore, is always cool and moist, and that from a brick wall is only a scant measure of protection from the sun. Yes, indeed; trees are worth preserving.—Buffalo News.

Zoning Proved of Value

Committees on buildings and plumbing codes and zoning ordinances have been instrumental in revising methods of work in every state. The result has been greater uniformity in design and more economical utilization of materials. The zoning ordinances are helping to safeguard residence districts from wanton intrusion by uses of land which are best grouped apart from homes.

Home Owner Is Best Citizen

Maintaining a high percentage of individual home owners is one of the searching tests that now challenge the people of the United States. The present large proportion of families that own their own homes is both the foundation of a sound economic and social system and a guarantee that our society will continue to develop rationally as changing conditions demand.
