"Ashland Has It", the slogan adopted by the Lithian Committee is one that can be used most effectively. It opens opportunities to get before the strangers in this city the many natural advantages that Ashland does have. It provides a means to sell our own people upon the resources of this community, and it is doubly valuable because of the psychology that can be used in connection with it. The arousing of natural curiosity by the simple statement that "Ashland Has It", the fact that people are very human and will naturally ask the question "Well, what have they?" should be the means of conveying to many in an effective manner just what we do have.

However there is one possible danger, the town wag, the one who can see no good in anything, the one who thinks he is building up by tearing down, can put the reverse upon the good intent of the committee by their selection. Any effort to do this should be met with a vigorous protest by interested citizens. For there are those who will think they are witty, when they attempt to place the wrong interpretation on it.

W. G. Ide, manager of the State Chamber of Commerce recently declared that the middle west was discussing Oregon in a most favorable manner, and that he expected a decided influx of settlers from that territory.

He based this assertion upon the fact that those who were coming into this state were doing so because they had been told by others that Oregon presented good possibilities. If this fact be true then it behooves Southern Oregon in general, and Ashland in particular to get "Our house in order."

We have something to offer the new comer in Southern Oregon we have just as much or more to offer him, as has other sections of the state. But unless we offer it to him, he will not come, for the competition is too keen, other communities are busily engaged in presenting their attractions in as favorable a manner as possible, and if we are to compete then we should emulate them in so far as it would be consistent.

Merely as a suggestion along this line, in our opinion there should be an exhibit of local farm products some place, preferably in the Chamber of Commerce. At Grants Pass, one entire room is taken up with this form of advertising. It is difficult for a new comer to visit the Chamber of Commerce there or at Medford without getting an impressive view of products the soil will produce. But in Ashland, its different, there is not one single place where the products of the soil are on exhibit, there is not one finger lifted to properly place before strangers that which we have to sell to a new comer.

If a merchant was to attempt to do business by getting off some place in a dark room with no display windows, he would be considered foolish by his fellow business men, and the chances are, he would not last thirty days. Yet we want to sell Ashland to people, and we are attempting to do business without a display window, to show our wares.

How do we expect to sell anything if we don't at least use methods that business houses have tried and found successful in disposing of their own merchandise. Our problem of selling this vicinity to outside people is not one bit different than that problem which daily confronts the man with a room full of merchandise, but we expect to get results when we make no effort to merchandise our resources in a business-like manner.

It was stated recently in the sheriff's office that car registrations at this time was largely from foreign cars. These people are coming into Jackson county, but not into the Ashland vicinity. For this state of affairs we have no one to blame but ourselves. Wishing for more people to settle on our lands will not produce results. It takes work and a lot of it.

TEACHERS NOT GAGGED

Chico Enterprise: The amount of ignorance that prevails as to the teaching of evolution in the public schools is as amazing as it is deplorable.

Even the official representative of evolution, Maynard Shipley, president of the Science League of America, Inc., who addressed the state board of education in San Francisco last week urging that body to change its ruling so that evolution can be taught as a fact and not a theory, is either woefully ignorant or designedly ignorant of the true situation.

Shipley writes to the Daily News and to the Bulletin, both of San Francisco, and his letters were published on July 4, protesting against the alleged ruling of the state board "that no teacher (not text books) in California would be permitted to speak of evolution as an actual developmental process of nature."

Shipley knows, or should know, because he was told last week both privately and during regular public session of the board that the only ruling was as to text books. He was promised publicly that the exact wording of the rule would be promptly mailed to him. But in his eagerness he would not wait. This is the resolution that was adopted by the state board in April, 1925.

"Whereas, this state board of education is in receipt of numerous communications, and arguments both written and oral, representing various and different schools of thought on the subject of evolution; therefore, be it

"Resolved, that it is the policy of this board to list no books that teach evolution other than as a theory."

The state board of education has no authority to do the thing of which it is publicly accused by Shipley, that is order the teacher to teach evolution either as a fact or a theory. The school law, as enacted by the legislature provides quite definitely what subjects shall be taught. The state board has authority only to "adopt rules and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the state for its own government and for the government of the schools." The present board has not attempted by rule or otherwise to prescribe subjects that may or may not be taught in the high and grammar schools.

The state constitution provides that no sectarian or denominational doctrine may be taught. The teaching of evolution as a fact would be a violation of this provision.

A sect is defined by Webster in its first meaning as "a way or mode of life, hence a faith in certain precepts for the guidance of life; a religion; a faith," and in its second as "those attached to a certain opinion or set of opinions." Evolution is held by many excellent authorities to be a religion in its contradiction of the biblical belief of creation. The followers of the evolutionary sect in their anti-biblical propaganda are no less earnest and enthusiastic than the so called fundamental religionists.

Evolution suggests, if not teaches, the animal origin of man, which is diametrically anti-religious. The teaching of evolution as a fact is thus prohibited by the state constitution.

In a joint letter signed by nine California college presidents, including the presidents of the Universities of California and of Stanford university, which led to the adoption of the text book resolution of April, 1925, it was stated that in 12 debatable science books that had been submitted for approval, "evolution is presented as a theory and not as an established fact," also that "the theory of evolution could scarcely be omitted from any text book on biology or astronomy or geology."

Devoted as the evolutionist authors are to their theories, they are still broad enough and their publishing houses keen enough to defer measurably to the beliefs of Christian religionists and through the solicitude of the present politically minded and unscientific board of education extremely offensive assertions in biological text books have been softened and removed.

The procedure leading to the adoption of the text book resolution does not justify the unkind accusation by Shipley that the attitude of the board constituted a "political device" or his pointed complaint that no member of the board is a scientist.

TO MAKE STENCIL

The ingenious housewife may make her own stencils. Use a heavy parchment paper and put the pattern on this with carbon paper. With a sharp pointed knife cut out the design. If you plan to use two or three colors, make separate cutouts on separate pieces of parchment patterns, cutting out only the parts colored one color on one piece of paper, and only those colored the other color on the piece of paper. Designs may be selected from wall paper patterns. The simpler patterns are likely to be more successful.
