HAVE INTERESTING TRIP

Ochocho creek which is dammed up with a reservoir as big as our Hyatt. But the landowners have the same trouble as elsewhere in paying taxes, so we were told that many farmers have not paid their taxes for several years.

Yellow Pine Timber

Leaving Prineville we passed through the best Yellow Pine timber we ever saw as we had not seen any timber to speak of since we left Fort Klamath. It was quite a treat to us.

The grade is very easy from the west and very beautiful until we reach the summit of a spur of the Blue Mountains a mile high. But on the east side the grade is crooked and steeper toward the narrow valley where the town of Mitchell is located. 55 miles, population about 200 and in a deep narrow canyon.

Town of Mitchell

Around Mitchell and 60 miles around the hills are bald with short grass, so its a good sheep country until you get to Service Creek on John Day Highway 25 miles from Mitchell, the road down the John Day river goes through a good belt of yellow pine timber until you reach Fossil 21 miles, then the timber disappears and enter into the bald hills, and all in wheat. Fossil claims a population of 500, and the towns between it and Arlington on the Columbia is of no consequences each only a hundred or two population. The distance from Fossil to Arlington is about 60 miles.

Arlington

Arlington claims 500 inhabitants, has a ferry connection across the river to Washington 2nd night out. This 60 miles of country is all in wheat as far as the eye can reach on both sides the farmers own land by the thousands of acres, they wrain half and summer fallow the other half every year, so the land average about 35 bushels to the acre they were getting $1.07 in Arlington for the wheat.

The towns along the Columbia river are small, Heppner Junction, Castle Rock, Boardman, and Umattila are small places. Wermiston, Stanfield and Echo are large probably about 500 each. All in Umattila river which was dry as the water was taken out for irrigation.

Pendleton

Pendleton about 85 miles from Arlington is situated in a canyon has a population of over 7000, during round about 5000. Elevation about 100 feet. The little community of Felix 15 miles north of Pendleton produces one million bushels of wheat every year.

North of Pendleton the valley widens out by Weston its quite narrow. Milton and Freewater is almost in one town, must have close to 5000 people there. Then comes Walla Walla with 22,000 population and about 45 miles north of Pendleton. Elevation about 1,400. Rich and level land for miles around.

Several Small Towns

Several small towns lies between it and Colfax, distance of 100 miles. This 100 miles of country is very hilly, the road runs through the narrow canyons, and nothing but wheat everywhere. Colfax is in Whitman county, Washington claims a population of 3500 lies in a narrow canyon, one street only with short crossstreets, so when they have a heavy rain in the winter the water runs up over the streets and sidewalks.

They claim to be the richest city in the world for its size and population. They get artesian water from wells on top of the hills above them, 120 feet deep so when the town grows in size and need more water, all they have to do is to dig another well. Whitman county raises 15 millions bushels of wheat annually and goes about 40 to the acre and never a failure. There we put in the third night.

Country is Leveler

A little north of Colfax the country gets a little more level, the hills are sharper but not so big and wonderful deep soil. The road has been cut through the hills in many places sometimes 50 or 60 feet deep as on top, no rock to be seen for 50 miles.

Spokane is 65 miles to the north but as you get within 15 miles the country gets spotted and the land poorer. Elevation 2100. Spokane claims a population of 110,000 a well built city, but has some hard times now, mining and lumber business has lipped away, so all that remains is wheat, waterpower, and railroads.

Sunset Highway

Entering the Sunset highway toward the west 335 miles to Seattle first place is Davenport 38 miles. The highway forks here one goes toward the the southwest to Ellen-burg but we took the northwest route to Wenatchee about 110 miles where we put in the 3rd night. The 38 miles from Spokane, to Davenport, the land is rich and level and all in grain. Westward it is poorer and spotted, about half way between Davenport and Wenatchee is the Grand Coulee Canyon, a most wonderful freak of nature like a sink from the tableland 2 miles wide and about 50 miles long thousands of feet deep, and the rock walls stands so straight up and perpendicular as a wall on a building in many places on both sides of the hollow. Characters resembling the old Swedish ruins is chiseled on some of those wais which must have a meaning, if they could be interpreted. Wenatchee claim a population of 13000. But a cynic told us the city itself only had 7,000, but some booster lay claim to the city all the adjacent country on both sides of the river which is all in orchards. Elevation about 1000 and on the Columbia river. When we asked the natives what supported the city the answer was apples and its never a failure from one year after another. The wheat fields from the tableland to the east 2500 feet above is also helping the city too. The bottomland and benches along the river are all in orchards and irrigated for miles and miles up and down the river, the trees stand very close together so the branches interlock from one tree to the other. From Wenatchee the highway goes north up the Columbia and Wenatchee rivers and cross the summit at Blewitt pass, 6500 feet high new graded road cut out from the side of the mountain, and has more bends and the most crooked road we have ever been over.

On Pacific Slope

Now we are on the pacific slope and going down a beautiful wood country to Cle-Elum in a narrow valley and some Coalmines close by. The Roslyn Coal mines are also close by, where coal in large quantities is mined. The next place of importance is Lake Roehochus which is dammed up as reservoirs to the Yakima river, and from where the Yakima Valley over 100 miles to the south gets their water for irrigation and empties in to the Columbia.

Lake on Summit

This lake is on the summit of the Snoqualmie pass, where another lake a little to the west called the Cedar lake and from which Seattle gets its water supply. It is 100 per cent pure. The highway leads through some beautiful forest and everything is green, following the Snoqualmie river all the way to Seattle.

Beautiful Seattle

Entering Seattle from the south around Lake Washington its a marvel of beauty, no dust, everything is green, beautiful homes and public places, fresh and salt water everywhere, buildings new modern and clean and claim about a half million of people. The only place in the world where they have a fresh and salt water harbor. As a canal with locks run from Salmon Bay on the sound through Lake Union and then into Lake Washington. As most every one knows the roads and the country between Seattle and Ashland I will not dwell but very little on it, will say about the capital city of Washington, Olympia that it has just completed a four million dollar state building and their loyalty to the state was so strong that not a dollars worth of material was not bought that could not be gotten in Washington. Olympia has a good hotel and plenty of Oysters.

Longview is Playground

Longview is fixed up for a playground more than for industry as hundreds of acres are set out in parks, lawn, flowers, golf links and lakes. No particular business so the eastern millionaires that have been backing this waste of money is starting investigation, as no returns are coming in.

Getting into Portland we decided to see the much talked about Columbia river highway so after dinner we started for the Dalles 95 miles many and beautiful points of interest is seen along the Columbia which I will not try to describe. Stayed in the Dalles over night as we figured to reach

Eugene that evening about 260 miles, we left without breakfast and drove 20 miles south to Dufer for it on the Dalles-California Highway and got into Redmond by 11 o'clock. 138 miles. The towns between the Dalles and Redmond are very small. Dufur, Tygh, Valley, Manpin, Madrar, Methous and Culver. None over 4 or 5 hundred population, crossed over the new high bridge between Culver and Terrbanne of the Deschutes river 127 feet. The land between The Dalles and Redmond 138 miles is a rolling table land very spotted about one fourth grain land balance pasture rocks and dust.
