J.—While city officials and expert engineers were standing under a giant chimney, 365 feet high and weighing 4,000 tons, discussing plans to remove it, a cracking sound was heard and the chimney fell of its own accord. It had withstood recent terrible explosions and had been dynamited seven times.

Electricity!— The New Helper on the Farm

Says William M. Jardine Secretary of Agriculture

"Electricity has already made important contributions both to labor saving on the farm and to a more modern, satisfying rural life. I am confident it is going to make further contributions of equal or greater importance."

WHAT cheap and abundant electric power has done for the industrial worker and his family in the alleviation of drudgery and the betterment of living and economic conditions, it now promises to do for the farmer. Through the activities of the Committee on Rural Electrification, with the cooperation of electric power companies, farm electrification is a fact today in twenty-three states. One hundred and forty practical applications of electricity to the farm have already been developed. As a result of the cooperation between farmers and the power companies there has been an increase of approximately eighty-three percent in the number of farms using electricity in the last three years. In simplifying the labor problem on the farm; lightening the load of physical toil; and increasing the comfort, convenience and cheer of the farm home, this extension of electrical facilities to rural communities is rendering a social and economic service of utmost national importance. To insure the continued extension of farm service, it is essential that the American principle of individual initiative, by means of which these advantages have been made possible, should be encouraged and maintained.
