Washington Snap Shots

Some of journalism's sanest thinking takes place during the "busman's holiday" which is the inevitable practice among Washington correspondents. Their thoughts stimulated by the issues of the current political campaign, the highly trained observers who report events for the folks "back home" continue among themselves to discuss national questions at informal gatherings at the Press Club and in friends' homes.

The result of these discussions frequently leads to clearer conceptions of national questions that result in more accurate appraisal of events in their daily dispatches. Recently a group of journalists were engaged in "shop talk" at the National Press Club. The discussion developed the fact, to the surprise of many, that some politicians were doing all they could to build up a belief that "profits" were improper; that it was against the best interests of all the people for some to make "profits."

That in itself was a surprise, so the correspondents went further in their discussion, trying to decide what a "profit" was. They reached the inescapable conclusion that everybody who has an income—whether it be coupons clipped from bonds or a weekly or daily wage—is making "profits."

The individual wage earner, they concluded, invests his ability and in some cases his brawn. His investment brings a "profit" back to him in the form of a wage or salary. When the "profit" accumulates, he in turn invests it, and the "profit" goes to work for him, making him more "profit."

Some of the correspondents had been relaying political criticisms of "profit" to their papers. From now on though their dispatches are likely to be tinged with a little doubt. They have no desire to see their personal "profit" disappear—it comes to them in the form of a weekly wage and it enables them to eat. Don't be startled if you find some Washington dispatches implying that a "profit" is all right.

These same correspondents are extremely interested in what is happening in the Canadian province of Alberta. Premier William Aberhart of Alberta was elected on a promise to pay pensions to everybody. That plan wouldn't work out, so he initiated a scheme of inflation through the use of monetary scrip.

The newspapers predicted the pension scheme would fail; it did. Now they are criticizing the scrip plan. Aberhart, touchy, threatens to require the licensing of newspapers. He would, of course, grant licenses only to the papers which were nice to him.

Washington correspondents are interested for two reasons. First, it shows what happens when a Share-the-wealth "Messiah" falls; second, it reminds them of the NRA, under which newspapers could have been required to get federal licenses.

The Census Bureau has put some other federal agencies on the spot. Recently, it announced that since 1900 the average span of life for men in the United States increased from 48 to 59 years, and for women from 51 to 63 years. It added that increase was due, in part, to "labor saving inventions in the home."

Some other agencies are seeking to picture labor saving devices as destroyers of jobs and life.

Twelve Oregon Loans Aid 76 Families

Twelve cooperative loans, totaling $3,846, are enabling 76 Oregon farm families to use new farm equipment, improve livestock and cut down canning labor in the home, announces Walter A. Duffy, regional director, resettlement administration, Portland, Oregon.

Most of these loans involve two-to-five-family partnerships among low-income farm families, said Duffy.

"We are able to make services available through our cooperative and community services section that otherwise would be beyond the financial ability of the members," said the director. "We can do this at a comparatively slight cost per member, yet each project is self-liquidating, the loan being repaid from service fees charged each member according to use."

Of the 12 loans, six are for threshing machines, binders and combines, two for purchase of purebred livestock sires, and four for home canning equipment.

The function of the community and cooperative services section, headed by H. M. Peet, is to supplement the individual rehabilitation of farm families through small cooperative groups whenever feasible, Duffy pointed out. A limited number of low-income families, not rehabilitation clients, can also participate in the cooperatives.

STRATOSPHERE GONDOLA COMING TO PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL

Gondola of the stratosphere balloon that carried Major Albert W. Stevens and Captain Orvil A. Anderson of the U. S. Army air corps 74,000 feet above the earth will be on display at the Pacific International Livestock Exposition in Portland October 3-10.

Immediately after the showing in Portland, which is sponsored by the National Geographic Society, the gondola will be shipped to the Smithsonian Institute for permanent exhibit. The history making ascent of the Explorer II, which established an all-time altitude record, was made from Rapid City, S. D., November 11, 1935.

The gondola of the Explorer II is but one of many new educational and entertainment features for visitors to the 26th annual Pacific International Livestock Exposition, according to O. M. Plummer, general manager of the West's greatest livestock and land products show.

Entertainment features include a Rodeo which comes as the final of all western shows this year and at which the grand champion cowboy of the world will be selected. Ace bronc riders and top cow hands of the nation will be seen doing their best for a share in the rich prizes and titles. Bronc riding, bull dogging, bareback riding and Brahma steer riding will all contribute to a generous program of thrills and spills.

Competing for public interest with the Rodeo will be one of the most elaborate horse shows in years, with high stepping blue bloods in all saddle and harness classes competing.

Highlight of the Horse Show will be an exhibition by the United States Army Horse Show Team, a group of selected cavalry officers who are rated as the best riders in the country. They will demonstrate the course of jumps executed at the Olympic games in Berlin.

Advance entries insure a mammoth showing of both livestock and land products for each of the 19 great shows held under the 11-acre roof of the exposition building. These include dairy cattle, beef, swine, fat stock, draft horses, sheep, poultry and pet stock, goats, dogs, land products, dairy products, wild life, 4-H Club and Smith-Hughes vocational exhibits.

"1936 will be another banner year for the Pacific International," predicted Plummer.
