LOPSIDED LAW

There is not much doubt concerning the bias of the Wagner Act. It is improbable, however, that the partisanship so strongly expressed in the present act will be left indefinitely in the law. After a while some Congress will begin to take second thought.

The Wagner Act is partisan because its penalties are directed only against employers. The law describes unfair labor practices on the part of an employer. It is silent concerning any wrongs which might be committed by employees or by unions representing them. The Wagner Act suggests both by what it says and what it omits that the employee can do no wrong while the employer must prove himself innocent.

Obviously, it is not human experience that one group is always right and another group always wrong. The law is detailed in its provisions aimed at preventing the development of any employee organizations dominated by employers. It very carefully safeguards the rights of workers to strike. In a word, many privileges and no obligations are accorded employees. Many obligations are laid upon employers and no privileges are extended to them. It is not conceivable that legislation so one-sided will long escape amendment.

For the present an immense stimulus is being given to the growth of labor unions. Long ago Great Britain, by law, recognized collective bargaining. When the British established statutory rights for labor, they exacted the acceptance of responsibilities. Sooner or later we shall proceed along that road. Power without responsibility cannot be permanent.—Collier's Magazine.

A special telephone meeting was called this week where the members learned they would be able to continue with the new telephone line again. The new poles are being laid this week by the members of the telephone board who are to give so much of their time to the new line. Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Snyder and family moved to their farm in the upper section of the community the first of the week. Twins were born to Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tonn Sunday. They were named Harvey Leonard and Helen Louise. Mrs. Tonn who was Francis Wilson lived in this community before she was married. Friends send the congratulations.
