Christmas Migration, 1939

During the week before Christmas a strange and wholly modern nomadic population will move through the skies. You will probably not notice the yearly migration, for few will pass directly over great cities, and those that do will fly so high that little more than the beat of their flight will reach you in the streets below. No, we are not speaking of a migration of strange insects or wild fowl, but of the air-minded people, recently become a vast army, who each year fly home for Christmas.

Homeward bound for Yuletide in the early 1800's.

On every day of the week preceding Christmas, right up to the moment when the last electric candle winks on in the latest Christmas tree, the skies will be alive with the hum of motors and the whisper of high airs against giant wing and fuselage. The mammoth liners of the sky will bear thousands of Christmas nomads, from every part of the country, home for the yearly reunion at Yuletide.

According to officials of the Air Transport Association, approximately 400 passenger planes will fly daily, 2,800 planes per week—cities like Flint, Mich.; New Haven, Conn.; North Worth, Texas; Grand Rapids, Mich.; Youngstown, Ohio; Hollywood, Calif.; or Nashville, Tenn. From two cities alone, 122 planes fly daily in all directions—70 from New York City and 52 from Chicago.

Before the development of air travel most people working far from home could not afford the time required for the long journey there and back, to spend the holiday with their families. Still farther back, in the days of horse-drawn coaches, when a 200-mile trip meant a week on the road, few were the fortunate who could go back home, even to an adjacent state for the Christmas holiday.

Thus, the industrial era, sometimes charged with the weakening of family and home ties, has provided, through the development and perfection of air transport, one of the greatest factors in the reunion of hosts of widely separated families at Christmastide.

Oregon One of 19 States Reporting Accident Decrease

Oregon was one of the 19 states in the nation to report traffic fatality decreases for the month of October, 1939, compared to the same month a year ago, it was indicated in reports from the National Safety Council, received today by Earl Snell, secretary of state.

October traffic deaths in this state were 25 percent under those for the same month a year ago while for the nation as a whole, the traffic death toll went up four percent, the report revealed.

For the first ten months of the year, Oregon's fatality list was four percent lower than for the corresponding period in 1938 while for the nation as a whole, the improvement was but two percent. Only 21 states showed improvement on the ten months basis. On the Pacific coast, both Oregon and Washington made a better showing while California's record was worse. Other states in the far west to show improvement were Idaho, Utah and Colorado.

Oregon's traffic fatalities during the month of November decreased 15 percent from the toll for last November, but national figures on November are not yet available.
