Conservation of Gas Consumption Urged

By Dr. E. B. McDaniel, Pres., The Oregon State Motor Ass'n. Motorists throughout the country have been alarmed by the reports that soon we will be having "gasolineless Sundays" and other forms of government rationing of gasoline.

The situation is really a serious one. At the present time the east coast areas are the ones directly affected. The American Petroleum Institute has submitted a detailed report to the Office of Production Management showing that an acute transportation problem has been caused by the transfer of oil tankers from the coastal trade to Great Britain and the United States Navy.

The report emphasized that we have no fear of shortage from actual production of petroleum products but that the matter of transporting the oil to distribution centers is the problem. Even now substitute transportation systems (such as pipelines) are being completed to meet the emergency. Until these are in use next year, the shortage will be felt.

Rationing Can Be Prevented

Immediately following the publication of the API report, President Thomas P. Henry, of the American Automobile Association (the Oregon State Motor Association is the local affiliate) sent a letter to Petroleum Coordinator Harold Ickes inclosing the AAA plan to prevent rationing and "gasolineless Sundays".

The AAA plan is simple and with the whole-hearted co-operation of the motoring public will save up to TWENTY PER CENT of present consumption of gasoline.

AAA Plan Explained

The plan is this:

1. Every motorist reduces his average driving speed.
2. Every motorist avoids "jack-rabbit" getaways and other wasteful driving practices.
3. Every motorist has his car adjusted for maximum fuel capacity.

I present the following table tabulated by the United States Bureau of Standards following exhaustive tests. The results show the startling increase in gas consumption with even moderate increases in speed.

Miles per hour	Miles per Gallon
10	18.7
20	18.9
30	18.0
40	16.4
50	14.6
60	12.6
70	10.6
80	8.6

Voluntary Conservation The Answer I think that everyone will agree if we can meet this threatened shortage by the voluntary cooperation of everyone, the problem has been solved in an American way.

Secretary Ickes has heartily endorsed this AAA plan of conservation and the plan has been adopted in virtually all its phases by the special Petroleum Conservation of the District of Columbia.

The average American motorist is an extravagant driver. Speeding along the highway, getting off to sudden starts in city driving, and operating cars not adjusted for maximum fuel consumption efficiency, the nation's motorists each year burn millions of gallons of gasoline unnecessarily. During times of petroleum overproduction these extravagant habits had an unfavorable effect only on the motorist's pocketbook. Today, when shortages threaten certain sections of the country because of transportation difficulties, it is imperative that motorists stop this waste and begin conserving gasoline.
