wounded. South and west of Stalin-grad the Reds are still forging ahead, taking more and more important railway points and towns. Unless something unforeseen happens, the Russian army will in time regain all the country lost when the big drive began and may even drive Hitler's gang entirely out of Russia.

But there is one fly in the ointment—the navy reports show that the submarine still is taking an awful toll of American and British shipping. We haven't solved that problem yet. In spite of the almost miraculous speed shown in American shipyards, ships are being sunk almost as fast as the yards can build them. Which isn't so good. On the rest of the home front, things are beginning to get straightened out slowly. It is reported that more farmers and farm laborers are going to be deferred, which will help a lot. Washington is now woking on the problem of getting more farm machinery for this year, without crippling the war effort too much. At least, it is thought that it will be easier to get repairs and parts.

So there's the picture for this week, folks—as near correct as we can make it. Cheerio!
