BUILDING CASTLES I planned to build myself a castle Where I could wine and dine my friends in luxury.

I planned to build my castle In a chosen spot down by the sea. Then I thought of the mountain fastness Among the fir and stately pine. On a mountain side I'd build my castle.

And there in ease I would recline. Then I heard a small voice saying, That wealth and riches wasn't mine to try. So I can only build a cottage. By a public road and watch the world go by.

But no, I'll not be bound by lack of riches. I vow I never will despair So I will keep on building castles Just building castles in the air. C. M. Mosher, Central Point, Ore.

up until he talked as thick as a drunk. Slow as cold tar... that is Smudge, when needing to move. Whether it is his tail caught in the door, or a foot stepped on, he makes but the slightest meow-and still holds his position. He was lying on the clean sheet on the machine, which needs patching. The flyswatter was used on him soundly. Did he move? Not him. Nor cry. Just hunched himself up as tight as possible and lay there. Had to be lifted down. Three toe nail holes are in my arm where he hung on as he fell off my lap. He can move plenty fast when the spool or ball occupies him. Or grabbing a meal as the birds eat the chicken feed. He was on the kitchen roof this morning begging for help. He found the ladder at the pantry window, walking down three rounds, and ran the side rail to the ground.

One of our preachers who was a missionary in the Gilbert Islands 27 years, told us something of them Friday. His face literally shone as he reviewed some of his life there; their cooperation and fellowship, group with group. They do not work on Sunday. All day Saturday until midnight they may cook and prepare for the Sabbath, but it is a holy day to them. And whatever is left from the meals is divided equally as they go home. The very islands he knew so well, some of you have become acquainted with. Perhaps you are reaping the seed he sowed in teaching Christ's way of life.

Part of the table decoration Friday resembled manzanita. But no, it had both flower and fruit, seedpod. The flower was longer and slimmer, the leaf more rounded at the apex. But the pod! Rich red balls hung on delicate stems. In clusters each was set together like mosaic, each bit ending in a fine thread. In the sun, the red appeared silvered over. Like delicate frost work. Opened up, the inside was soft and mellow, and the color of honeydew melon. It tasted like jam. The bits of red mosaic must have been seeds. Some one called it a strawberry bush. And every one wanted a slip. We had a brush with garvanzos this week. They look like nasturtium seeds. When seasoned as plain beans, we did not hit the dish so hard. So one tablespoon tomato catsup was added, and one of scraped onion, and a bit of oleo. Cayenne, of course. For contrast, a salad was made of one apple, one bose pear, and 3 stem of celery. Add one tablespoon sugar and salad dressing. Not too much. Try it sometime.

A little girl stormed at her mother. And a little "roundy" blushed over it.

"No manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God." So may it be with you, honey. In deepest truth, Aunty.

Letters to Nephews

By Ella H. Leonard

Dear nephew: Do you think your mother would say this is "the spitting image of you? What do YOU think of it?"

WHAT ARE LITTLE BOYS MADE OF?
Slips and snails and puppy-dog tails? Certainly not! These miniature males

Are made of wonder and stubborn pride And chuckles, and good clean dirt from outside.

They are made of sweetness that nine-tenths gulle And mischief redeemed by an angelic smile.

They are made of curiosity and devotion. But mostly they're made of perpetual motion.
