UNCLE SAM'S STAR SALESMEN

A few years ago no one would have thought it possible for this country to raise tens of billions of dollars voluntarily by public contribution within a space of days. It has not only been proven possible, but has been done more than once—we are now conducting the Fourth War Loan Drive with a minimum goal of $14,000,000,000.

Of course the demands of war are the driving force behind bond sales, but those demands alone would not suffice. No small share of credit for the money must go to the magnificent promotional efforts of the most efficient salesman in the world—the American businessman. His ability is legendary. Before the war he roamed the world. He sold everything under the sun from washing machines to hat pins. His customers ranged from head hunters to Eskimos.

What is more natural than when faced with the biggest selling job in history, the American businessman should come through with colors flying? Perhaps nowhere are his energies and abilities more evident than in the bond selling efforts of the chain store industry. The chain stores are classic examples of American efficiency and progressiveness. Their distribution technique made necessities and luxuries available to more people than all the social reform programs ever devised.

The entire nation can be thankful that American salesmanship is offered unqualifiedly in helping the government raise needed war revenue.
