South America As Seen by Local Lady

Mrs. Mildred Swain is writing to her mother Mrs. E. E. Scott, from South America, where she is with her husband, who is employed by the government rubber research.

I am forwarding two more movie films to Eastmans on this same plane. Most of the pictures were taken when Mary Lou and "Pop" Warner and Joe and I took an all day boat trip on the river Sunday.

In class Sunday, we were discussing how different folks are in expressing themselves. Alma comes home from school with face a-shine to tell its happening. Mary was calm. Are we wells or gushing springs?

A boy was left with friends while his mother was away a while. He was restless. They gave him every thing they thought would interest him. Still, he went to the window and pressed his small face against it.

The father was carrying the heavy tomes of his library up stairs. His 5 years old son was "helping." He puffed and grunted, but could not make the stairs. "Help me, daddy," he begged. "I'll carry you and the books, too," his daddy told him.

A southern born girl in nurse's training found it distastful to take care of a black mammy. When the negress was leaving, she said to the girl, "Ah hopes you gets along fine, honey. An ah hope you has enough trouble to keep you close to God."

While at Kessler Field, a station of the Army Air Forces Training Command, he will be given training classifications and medical and psychological tests. If he successfully

It is difficult to write when the outdoors cries so for me to come. Straight ahead, that window again is compelling in gold and green. To the left, the neighbor's wall is banked with the deep red of Japanese quince. The Oregon grape brushing the window is achingly lovely in its bursting of bloom. I must make my eyes behave if this is to get written.

The trial and error method is the hardest one, but the only one sometimes, that is known. As you were told, some way had to be found to reach the surface above the gas stove and the sink, to clean that calomine. A step ladder was set at each end of the stove, but the space on one side was so narrow, the ladder was almost straight up. And of course its step slanted, making me fearful the board set between the ladders would slide off. Mommy was called as watchman. There's no denying I was a fraid-cat, as I stood up there with nothing to hang on to; and so close to the ceiling that my back was an S. Of course that was the time the children chose to be a problem. David didn't like his beloved rocker. His squirmings put him thru the chair back ready to topple backward, with Robin perfectly indifferent about it. Sisny pulled at mommy, squawling, "You dotta turn home. We are doing to town."

want to do to town. You said you were doing to take us. . . And me causing it all. . . To the right of the sink, the plank had only about an inch projection to rest on. But the surface was small. Still, it took 1 1/2 hours to do them. Now the problem is to figure out the paint job, which dad is anxious to see done. And I'd rather work in the yard.

Linnets were sizing up the lilac bush and the old nest. Pigeons examined the barn for an opening. Rusty raced up a frail scotch broom, and hung tight in a tiny crotch, as it sent and swayed in the wind.

An all day job Friday gave us hot water again ($22.25). It has been so roily ever since. And was not considered good for washing. This huge wash is mostly white things. Dad said to drain it in a bucket and empty it. Being constitutionally lazy, it did not appeal to me. So while ago, the hose was hauled down the hill, drawn thru the porch door into the bathroom. The faucet would not budge. Anyway, which way was fight or left? It was oiled. The plier handle, was stuck thru. A few light touches with the hammer on it, and the deed was done. And a race run to see if the hot water would hurt the flowers.
