

For What It's Worth

By K. D. P.

I was mighty glad to see Stanley back here, though he was here only on a short furlough. He certainly is as sassy as ever, the same as when he was a printer's devil here in this shop. I am only disappointed that he could not have time enough to go fishing with me. So I went last Saturday night and caught a nice steelhead so that Stanley might enjoy eating the fish before he went back to New York.

But as far as fishing is concerned I am through wading in the river for the water has become terribly cold. So from now on till next spring I will do some nigger fishing along the shore.

In my years of fishing in the Rogue River, this year is the poorest season I have ever seen, and in all respects next year's fishing may be much worse and from all signs, this may be true.

Boy, I hate the thoughts of the boys in service overseas coming home to find that the river is completely skinned.

It is time that the commission do something about the river. I am much puzzled about the work of the fish counters at Gold Ray dam. I am beginning to wonder if it is worthwhile to put in the counters there because the commission should have found out that the fish life is decreasing all the time and they would have done something just as closing the river fishing to the public.

What say you, Kenneth Denman, you are now a member of the game commission and a true lover of steelhead fishing in the river. You should know that good steelhead fishing has declined in the last ten years. With your knowledge of the river's conditions, you should be able to do something about it even if you have to approve the closure of the river fishing for a couple of years.

Mrs. Laura Clark and Mrs. Ed. Chamberlain were the leaders of the program and to start it off the combined clubs sang a group of 4H songs. Enid Gaynor and Arlene Hay of Eagle Point sang a duet.

Walter Kahall and Dick Chamberlain gave a skit, which showed the Right Way and the Wrong Way of getting into bed, which was a riot.

The next was a tap dance by Charmayne Charley of Lake Creek. Nadine Davies and Charlotte Kent of Antelope gave a very good demonstration of hemstitching.

The final number was the Style Revue. Little girls 10 years of age had made perfect point dresses.
