

For What It's Worth

By K. D. P.

The mighty have fallen and how!

Last year toward the waning of the season, I, in fact, begged Jim and Ray to get a buck for me when I could not get a good proper shot at one. They did not get any, even after wasting some rounds of shells.

So this year I went again and without benefit of such crack buck hunters as Jim and Ray to show me how, I actually got a buck. It was a nice three-point buck, killed somewhere in the vicinity of Grizzly Creek near Dead Indian Soda Springs. I used only three shots to get it, too. The first shot was made two weeks ago when the buck ran too fast for me. The second shot was made this week on the buck I got, knocking it down and the third to kill it completely.

I was pretty shaky allright after killing my first buck. Well, the first thing that popped into my head is that I am gonna have lots of fun razzing such great experts like Jim and Ray. They may get bucks allright but no matter how big or small the bucks are, they cannot get away from the fact that they have failed to show me how to get bucks or to shoot a dozen times before getting a single hit.

But let me tell you that it is no fun packing such an animal some three miles to the car. It was all down hill packing allright but there were so many cliffs that I had to make lots of detours. But that buck is worth that much for no longer can Jim and Ray attempt to show me how to get a buck or to miss at least ten times before hitting a buck. Oh boy, what a merry time I am going to have this winter.

Well, last Monday Ray and Jim, being chagrined at my buck, decided to go out and show me that they still could get a buck every time they go out. Well, they came back that night and claimed that they never saw any bucks. But Jim saw a bear—such a big bear that he never even made a single shot at it. What! Not one shot. A man like Jim, who could be so profic on wasting ammunition on bucks, and still be stingy with shots on bear, is beyond me. What a mystery to solve? Maybe the true story will never be told.
