SUSY---

The store cat allows that, Good Friday and Easter may mean hot cross buns and new bonnets but April Fool's day is in there close and may cross a body up. Susy allows that this spring weather may fool some people into relaxing somewhat but it is late and if we are to do a good job of raising food it is high time to forget the clock and dig in before old man summer bears down on us too strong.

Letters to Nephews

By Ella H. Leonard

Dear nephew:
Feeling neglected? Taking care of a sick person takes up one's time pretty much, but I will scratch a bit.

There is a buzzer on the stove which is a memory jogger. The other day a monotone was heard with a different note to it. Poor Smudge's tail got caught in the refrigerator door when it was swung shut, and there he was buzzing to bring me back to the kitchen.

We had a weird hail storm the other day. The stones drifted down very slowly and widely spaced. The light shone strangely. Catching some of the stones in my apron, they were found to be almost perfect cones with diameter and height about 1/4 inch. They fell point first.

A stranger came to see dad. He had quite a way about him. Dad suddenly said, "You're appetin' me a lot, ain't you?" The man answered "Yes. And I'm the very one that can do it." With that settled, quite a while was pleasantly spent talking "horse".

The Oregon grape outside the window has grown so tall. Its budded ends are trying to bloom—if it ever warms up. With snow on the hills, it's still plenty cold. The violets have about finished. Their patches of blue give such joy. Quince bushes are growing redder and redder. I've just found that I've erred again—having separated the male and female of a choice shrub last fall, setting one in the front yard and the other in the back. And am told there can be no lovely berries unless they are permitted closer association.

My wee patch of garden is yet untended. It worries dad that I have not to it, so he scratched its surface. But I'm thinking that perhaps it is because he likes to play with his new cultivator. (Hear the anvil? And the rasp? Or should I say "file" on the shoe.)

I hope you are giving serious thought to Easter. With death all around you, aren't God and Christ much more real to you? Doesn't it make one try to fill this life full of the worthwhile? And look with joy to a beautiful Resurrection morning? "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith."

Your "queer", Aunty.
