Big Oregon Hop Harvest Calls for 40,000 Pickers. With the harvest of a hop crop that is expected to be at least a million pounds greater than last year in full swing, Willamette valley hop yards are still in need of additional pickers, according to reports received by the state farm labor office at Oregon State college. Forty thousand pickers will be needed in hops alone. Additional thousands will be necessary to finish up snap beans and harvest the western Oregon prunes crop which is expected to be almost double that of a year ago. Two girls are shown above spending their vacation—earning good money and having a pleasant time—in a hop yard. Below is a picking scene of a typical Willamette valley hop yard. Housing facilities are available at practically all yards.
