

Members of Congress For Oregon Disagree

Washington, D.C.—Oregon's senators and Harris Ellsworth, Oregon's Fourth District representative, were in sharp disagreement over emergency labor legislation last week.

Ellsworth voted in the House for President Truman's recommended labor controls, but Senators Guy Cordon and Wayne Morse voted "no" even after the Senate killed such drastic provisions as drafting strikers and confiscation of profits during government operation of a struck plant.

Morse said the bill's use of court injunction against unions would be a "red flag" that would produce "defiance" and "violence." Cordon said the action was too hasty to permit public hearings.

Whether the three Oregonians would agree on another critical topic—military draft legislation—was a question this week.

Ellsworth did not participate in the debate when the House passed a "stop-gap" bill continuing Selective Service machinery until June 30, excluding teen-agers from the draft and postponing inductions until October 15. Secrecy shrouded House votes on amendments to this measure, but Ellsworth was recorded as voting for it on final passage.

Cordon and Morse, however, voted for a Senate amendment making all men from 18 to 45, except fathers, subject to draft until May 15, 1947. The Senate concurred in the House move to grant pay increases, but Cordon and Morse voted with the majority to limit the extra pay to enlisted men. Cordon voted for the Senate version on final passage, but Morse refrained from voting with the declaration that he thought the Army should be placed on a voluntary basis as soon as possible.

"Terminal Leave Pay" May Be Delayed

Veterans were cautioned this week not to become prematurely excited over the pending "terminal leave pay" bill in Congress because the possibilities are that, should it become law, it will be some time yet before any pay will be available to ex-servicemen for unused furlough or leave time.

This word of caution came from officials of the state Department of Veterans' Affairs, after reports that veterans have started already to make application for this pay in various veterans' aid offices throughout the state, believing that the bill had already been passed.

Actually, Veterans' Affairs spokesmen said, the bill only came out of the House military affairs committee last week.

Although the bill passed the House Tuesday, the Senate still must take action, and considerable delay is expected there.

Furthermore, spokesmen said, even if the leave pay bill should pass both houses there is a possibility the president will follow the lead of the budget bureau, which is opposed to the bill, and veto it.

If and when it does become law, Veterans' Affairs officials said they will release full details and explain how Oregon veterans can apply for the pay.
