

Fire This A. M. at Lininger Plant

Thursday, 1:15 A.M. the black dog (Mike) at the Lininger Sand and Gravel plant awakened Mrs. Calvin Stringer and as she arose to see what was wrong. As she looked out the window, saw the battery charger plant on fire. She awakened the Fosters and she and her husband and Mr. Foster soon had the fire under control. Though it burned the walls and two battery.

Then as Mr. Foster kept watching the rest of the night and as he was taking a look at the fire again, came back to the office again and found the electric heater had gotten so hot that it scorched the wall in the office.

Work on the new Central Point cement bridge across Bear Creek is progressing rapidly. However, on account of the damage done by flood waters early in the winter and unfavorable weather since, the contractor will be unable to complete the job by the time first estimated—May 31. Instead, it is thought it will be about July 1st before the new bridge and road can be opened for travel.

Richard "Dick" Isaacs has had a bad case of the mumps and it is reported that last week they jumped from one jaw to the other. He hopes to be able to return to work next week at the local branch of the First National Bank of Portland.
