

POINTS WEST

By Vivian McMurray

PORTLAND, ORE.: Much ado about nothing too much is what Westerners said about the recent black-white marriage of Paul Robeson's son.

Negro interpretive dancer and artist Thelma Johnson Streat married Caucasian Edgar Kline last winter. After an orthodox wedding reception and no fanfare, they left on their honeymoon. Now, according to her mother, they reside in a southern city each peacefully pursuing his own career.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH: The non-Mormon Republican governor of Democrat and Mormon-dominated Utah (J. Bracken Lee) is in a class by himself as governors go. His state, and his state alone, is the only one to show a downward trend in budget. Without fear or election-time retaliation he has cracked the knuckles of special interest groups as he pared state appropriations, oftentimes to the accompanying loss of matching federal funds.

BOISE, IDAHO: Another unique governor, C. A. Robins, of Idaho, was drafted by the people and ran only after thousands of citizens signed a petition stating they were only interested in better government and would never ask special favor.

CANBY, ORE.: There's a school bus driver and farmer who's high man on the totem pole as far as high school kids there are concerned. He stops the bus on the way home and they help with his hobby "carving totem poles."

First he copied Indian originals; then, following their theme symbolizing histories of races, he's done one for America. The American husband is at the bottom—bow-legged and weighted down, holding up a family complete with a mother-in-law, a full-bosomed Great American Mom with her department store charge accounts.

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.: Assemblyman Loc Waters from Los Angeles (the man whom Fred McMurray resembles) again bended his head over tax problems. He's back from the rough-and-tumble proxy-dominated Young Republican national convention at Salt Lake City, where he was barely beaten in a hot race for chairmanship.

Waters is a man to watch—unusual in that he solidified support in Arizona, Wyoming, Idaho, Oregon, almost all of Washington, and rival merchant-of-sunshine state Florida, in his fight against small steel magnate Tope of Michigan.

TILLAMOOK, ORE.: Morton Tompkins, Grangemaster of Oregon, is led around by the nose of Monroe Sweetland, says young Salem attorney

Jim Collins in an address at Tillamook.

As a son of a farmer, he called on farmers to look up from their work long enough to see what the professional lodge jobholder was up to.
