

75 OSC Graduates Instruct H.S. Ag

Seventy-five graduates in agriculture from Oregon State college are now vocational agriculture instructors in Oregon high schools, a recent survey shows. Nine 1952 graduates are included on the list.

At the present time, there are 81 Oregon high schools with vocational agriculture departments. An indication of the added importance given to this type of instruction is the establishment this fall of six new departments at Bend, Marshfield, Corbett, Clatskanie, Scio and Siletz high schools.

Working on a 12-month basis, the vocational agriculture instructors plan their subject matter according to the farming needs and practices of the local communities and supervise students in individual farming projects as well as directing the school Future Farmers of American program.

Vocational agriculture teaching training at OSC is under the direction of the agricultural education department.
