THE INS AND THE OUTS

There are but two great political parties in the United States. The first is the party of the ins. The second is the party of the outs.

The ins are working to stay in. The outs are working to get in.

No matter whether the ins are out or the outs are in. It is always the ins that do the stealing and the outs that do the squealing.

When the ins stay in, it is another term in. But when the ins do not stay in, it is another turn out.

When the ins strike out, the outs run in.

When the ins fail to do, the outs say they ought to do. But when the ins do do, the outs say they ought not to do.

The ins and the outs are always busy, staying in, getting out or getting in.

Whether the ins watch out or not, the outs are always watching the ins. The outs are usually none the wiser by getting in.

The ins are always the losers before they get out.

The ins have the ammunition but the outs have the guns.

The ins must work, grin and bear, for the outs are always working to take and share.

The ins may never want to get out, but the outs are always wanting to get in.

The outs get in by the voters voting against the ins; for the voters always vote against the ins when they change but never for the outs.

The ins are sure to have just as many outs as they have ins.

It is easy for the outs to stay out, but it is always hard for the ins to stay in.

The outs may never get in, but the ins will always get out.

After all, there will always be only two parties. The ins and the outs and the outs and the ins.
