Classes of the Bible school are in competition with each other to see which one is able to invite the most people to Bible school and church during each week.

Army titles will be heard during Bible school meetings during this contest. Commander-in-chief is Don Whitney, minister, with Carl Hover, superintendent, as colonel.

General John Heberling will be doing a large part in promoting the campaign in the classes, which will each have a captain as follows: men's class, J. W. Shirley; keystone class, Ina Adams; young adult class, Jim Davis; high school class, Mariene Keene; junior high class, Linda Warren, and junior girls, Alice Thompson.

Junior boys and primary captains each Sunday will be the ones who have given the most invitations. Members of the classes will win the right to be lieutenants by extending the largest number of invitations for the week.

Each member of each class not having a higher rating will be a private first class. Those failing to make any invitations will be demoted to buck privates.

A large graph will be kept in the auditorium to record the progress of each class. The campaign began this week and first reports will be made Sunday. The campaign continues through October 3.

POWER BEHIND THE SAW

Paul Bunyan and his blue ox were prophetic symbols of power... legends created by the men with axes and hand saws who felled the trees in early days of lumbering. They were dynamic and colorful figures, but their days are in the past.

The modern lumberman cuts his timber with power saws... quickly, easily and comparatively inexpensively. In ten counties of Oregon and California COPCO brings electricity to the switch at his fingertips. And from the fallen tree to the finished lumber, each step is a product of power.

Our great timber reserves, protected by intelligent conservation and reforestation, assure an unlimited future for the lumber industry. COPCO, a western partner, will continue to bring more power for progress with its continuing program of expansion and construction to help people produce more, have more and live better.
