Traffic Deaths Claim 165 During First Six Months

One hundred sixty-five persons lost their lives in Oregon traffic during the first six months of 1955. Compared to the same period of 1954 this represents a saving of 15 lives, according to Secretary of State Earl T. Newbry.

In the first half of 1954, 180 person were killed in Oregon traffic.

While less people were being killed, drivers on Oregon's highways drove more miles and there were more registered vehicles in operation. Because of the increased mileage and the lowered death toll, the cumulative mileage death rate for the first five months dropped from 6.1 persons killed per one hundred million driven in 1954 to 5.1 for one hundred million miles in 1955.

While the record is good for the first half of the year, the secretary warned that the months of heaviest traffic and worst driving conditions are ahead and if gains of the first six months are to be maintained it will take increased alertness on the part of drivers of the state.

RETURNS TO DUTY

Pfc. Darrell L. Glenn, who has been home on leave since Tuesday, July 19, will leave Friday night to return to his base. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Glenn of 143 Maple street.
