They Have Adjourned.

Congress has adjourned and the country feels relieved. The session which was called by the President simply to provide certain appropriations for the current expenses of the Government, which ought to have been provided for before the adjournment of the regular session, has been prolonged by the Democratic majority for partisan purposes for several months. They have carefully studied the means by which they might force some issue upon the President which would injure the Republican party and benefit the Democracy in the ensuing presidential election. They have engrafted unusual and extraordinary provisions upon the regular appropriation bills and sent them to the President for approval, and when returned with the veto they have withdrawn the objectionable provisions. This has been repeated till their performances have assumed the character of childishness and folly. After frittering away the time till the patience of the country was well nigh exhausted they have adjourned without making full provision for administering the laws. They failed to make any appropriation for the payment of United States Marshals or their deputies. This is a very important branch of the Government service, and one that if neglected or inefficient will cause much damage to the public interests. A Washington dispatch of the 2nd, takes the following view of the situation:

"Commissioner Raum, of the internal revenue, said to-day the failure to provide for the Deputy Marshals was a virtual repeal of the criminal portion of the law relating to the illicit distilling. Deputy Collectors of the internal revenue have power to make a seizure of property for violations of the law, but have not power to make arrests. If a person was detected in illicit distilling he could not prevent the officer seizing the distillery, but he could stand still and defy arrest. By next Sunday every distiller in the country will know what the effect will be of having no deputy marshals to aid revenue officers, and I suppose the dishonest ones will seek to take advantage of the crippled condition of the office."

Confederate Money in Market.

It is a curious and significant fact that the success of the Democratic party, and the spirit which they have manifested since being clothed with power in the legislative branch of the Government, has aroused in those who were in sympathy with the late secession movement the hope of ultimate recognition of the Confederate cause and the payment of its liabilities. A late issue of the Philadelphia "Record" makes the following statement with regard to this subject:

"For the last few months (so says a local coin dealer) there has been a large increase in the number of inquiries from [the continent for] Confederate paper money. As a result, the price of the scrip (for Confederate notes have still a value) has materially advanced. The reason for this sudden demand no one seems to know. It is surmised, however, that an idea prevails there that some successful attempt may be made to redeem the Southern war-time issues. Whatever it may be the reason, however, it is certain the demand exists, and a local collector is this week shipping to England a collection of several thousand notes, ranging from $1 to $1,000, which are to be distributed among customers in Great Britain, France and other countries."

The number of Confederate notes still in existence in this country can not be estimated. It is certain however, that it runs far into the millions. One New York coin collector recently sold a bale of two millions at auction, is now traveling through Europe on the proceeds."

No one may be able to trace this movement to any particular act, yet the reason is sufficiently apparent. The Democratic party has achieved a partial success and controls the national hall of legislation. The strength of that party is in the South, and the Democracy of the South are represented by well known secessionists, men who made sacrifices for the "lost cause," and are still willing, as opportunity may offer, and as may be thought prudent, to pledge anew their faith. Their orators in Congress and elsewhere have gone so far as to indicate the possibility of doing away with all laws and constitutional provisions which may stand in the way of what they deem the rights of the South. Under these circumstances it is not surprising that Confederate paper should appreciate. The people will do well to see that they have no further ground for hope of the ultimate payment of these or any other Confederate claims than what now exist."

Some few weeks ago the Alaska Indians were seized with the superstition that one of their tribe, a young and beautiful squaw, was possessed of witchcraft, and a grand council of the chiefs and medicine men was held, and it was decided that she should be burned at the stake, and accordingly great preparations were made. The young squaw hearing of her fate appealed to Captain Beardsley, of the United States war ship, Jamestown, for protection. He told them if they burned her he would hang every one of them to the yard arm of the Jamestown. It is useless to add that their superstition immediately vanished."

WHEELING, July 5.—Ben Bogges and Louis Carrio got into a difficulty at Clarksburg, in this State, Saturday evening, which resulted in Bogges shooting Carrio, the ball entering his breast near the heart. Bogges has fled.

ST. JOSEPH, (Mo.) July 4.—A special to the Gazette from Platt City, says Dr. B. L. Spencer, a dentist and prominent citizen, was shot this morning by Wiley Stallard, a farmer residing near town. Spencer was seated in front of his office reading a paper, when Stallard approached, drew his pistol and fired. Spencer ran through a store room and Stallard followed, still shooting. Spencer fell in the back yard of the store, and died almost instantly. Stallard surrendered. He is charged with the death, while operating on Mrs. Stallard's teeth, administered whiskey and opiates, and while she was under their influence took improper liberties with her person, and attempted an outrage. Spencer leaves a wife and five children.

Fusion of Democrats and "Honorable Bilks" in California.

The Democracy of California, have partially coalesced with the New Constitution party. No enemies of the New Constitution party were more active or bitter than the Democrats a few months since, yet in the desperate effort to increase their chances of success in September, they surrender their principles and enter this discreditable copartnership. The New York Times comments on the coalition as follows:

"For a party that claims to be the untrifled, fearless, uncompromising, attitude of the Democracy of California is simply ludicrous. The whole performance in the Convention shows how desperate is the strait to which the once proud Democracy is reduced. Once the almost only party in the State, where it has been in power almost continuously *** now seeking fusion with the nondescript known as the 'Honorable Bilks.' Cole and Terry are fair representatives of the composite character of the H. B.'s; the former United States Senator by accident, and shelled by 'natural causes.' The Times also gives a resume of Terry's political record. A Democrat, then a Know-nothing, then a Democrat, next a Secessionist, then a Democrat again, and now a leading member of the H. B.'s. Nice companions, Cole and Terry."

Secession Oration on the Fourth.

The Rev. gives an account of a celebration at Wright's Springs, Clackamas county. The oration on the occasion is mentioned as follows:

"The gentleman who had been selected to deliver the oration was ex-Senator George K. Shields, of Salem. He was on hands and succeeded thoroughly in disgusting the people and driving them from within his hearing by a ranting, storming, secession speech. A more violent rebel speech could not have been uttered in the South during the late war than was made by him, and the assembled thousands, both Republicans and Democrats, left the grove thoroughly disgusted, not more than twenty of the untrifled who could stand lightning up to their chins remaining. We can not see how General Shields so forgot himself as to give way to such a harangue and general denunciation of the Republican party, and everything else save secession and rebellion. It may be that his long sleep in the oak grove on the bank of the Willamette, in North Salem, has befuddled his mind and caused him to forget that the rebellion has been wiped out, and peace purchased for one of the most prosperous nations of the earth. His burst of fiery secession eloquence caused him to be despised by men of his own party, and the differences of one people as a nation should not be mentioned. It was entirely out of place; and it is just such men as Geo. K. Shields, who was repudiated and snubbed by his own party when aspiring to a re-election, that irritates the wound and keeps afresh the cause that led to so much bloodshed and lamentation."

Imperial Succession in France.

A French paper publishes a codicil to the will of the Prince Imperial, deceased, which says: "The duty which our house owes to our country will not lapse by my death. The arduous and glorious task of continuing in the work of the first Napoleon will depend in the event of death, upon the oldest son of Prince Jerome Napoleon, who by the laws of succession of our house, is my heir. I trust my beloved mother, by seconding him in discharge of the responsibilities and duties which in the event of my death will devolve upon him, will give to me when I am no longer upon this earth, this best and supreme proof of her affection for me and of her love of France."
