BORDER ROMANCE.

[Denver Correspondence Boston Herald.] I read in the Denver Tribune the other morning the announcement of the killing of Yardmaster Jack Finchart of the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad. Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad. on the occasion of the transfer of the Denver and Rio Grande in accordance with the order of the Federal Court. The paragraph startled me exceedingly. Jack Finehart's was a figure familiar in certain circles of society all over the western country. In most of the States and Territories his deeds have made him almost an outlaw. Jim Currie, who shot Porter, the actor, in Texas, drew his first pistol under the tutorship of Jack Finehart. Jack Finehart has left a trail easy to follow him by wherever he has been. He was no vulgar ruffian. He was as nearly the ideal of a frontier "character" as I have ever heard of one man's becoming. Imagine a man six feet tall or over, with not an ounce of superfluous fiesh upon him, possessed of a handsome, determined face, stern as the countenance of justice, a man whose strength is hidden in the finish of his proportions. He walked with graceful military erectness, and saluted his acquaintances with great courtesy. His large monstache and broad white hat set him off to peculiar advantage. As any one who might have seen Buffalo Bill in his wild days would have set him down as an uncommon man, so any one meeting Jack Finehart would have wondered what sort of a record the man had. Jack was a Texan by birth and bringing up; a Texan in his manners; a typical Texan in his instincts; a Texan n his method of carrying a revolver (fully cocked and hanging from a belt behind); a Texan in his record; a thorough Texan "son-of-a-gun." The earliest days of the man's life were probably the most exciting. Blood was spilled as freely as water twenty years ago all over the West. Deeds that history shudders to relate were on the town annals of every of notice now in comparison with the life of a score of years ago, when Jack Finehart was a lad. He had a fine field to study in, and he was bred well. A man who started his cemetery before crossing the threshold of manhood, and before the down had left his cheek murder was no novelty to him. Finehart was often a leader of desperate people, and death came to him a hundred times, hovered about him, flirted with him, all but took him, and then departed. I am telling you the story of this man's life, to show you an inside picture of a border man, a little redeemed from the desperado in all his moods. He did not rob railway trains, coaches, horsemen, foot travelers, nor anybody else with his hands, but he quarreled, and drank, and killed, and loved along the frontier towns. Finally the war broke out. He had by this time acquired that perfect fearlessness and indifference to death that in some men accustomed to facing it becomes an absolute passion, urging them madly on to wherever a prospect of death exists. Finehart selected for his posts in the war the most fool-hardy dangerous and death-tempting there were to be had. He ran powder trains, made journeys exploration to see if the railroad had been torn up, at the rate of 70 miles an hour; he entered the Union camps at all points, led foriorn hopes, was always front in a skirmish, scouted and spied until the business palled on him, and he mixed himself up in railroad affairs until no undertaking was too hazardous. Once he started to cross a river over which the bridge tottered and appeared about to fall, having been burned by the Union troops. Everybody left the engine, and Jack plunged over the bridge alone. The bridge went down, the engine went down, but Finehart jumped and swam ashore. They were aping from a Union neighborhood and were under pursuit. Finehart's companions were captured. On one occasion there was a great bully in the army, and his powers was not limited in any direction. He had frequently killed his man; in fact, he enjoyed killing his man; it was an appetizing thing to do. In those days in Texas (he was a Texan) you could serve your time at this trade without any annoyance from the Justice Yes, he had a beautiful cemetery in Texas, and was going back presently to continue the work of popuating it. One day Jack Finehart, who watched his colleague in the graveyard business a good deal, happened to be in a saloon with him. The stranger had bardly ceased relating some wonderful adventures, when Jack drew an enormons revolver, cocked it, and laid it on the bar beside the man. The latter stared at the pistol and then at Jack. Finehart filled a glass with whisky, and, retiring a few steps, tasted it. Then he mid facing the stranger: They call this good whisky. Smell of it, and give me your opinion." And he dashed the tumblerful into the stran-

There lay the revolver at the man's elbow; there stood Finehart waiting to be shot dead.

The Coast Mail. heard noises outside. Says Jack, with "Let's see who they are ?"

His friend was already looking out. "Jack," he remarked, "they've got a Jack paused, thoughtfully, felt of his neck, and drawled, "Don't be scared; He knocked out the cartridges of both his revolvers and replaced them with others. He then felt of his bewie-knife, and made a number of rapid and exhausting movements to ascertain if he was stiff or not in condition. Meanwhile he could hear voices in different keys crying, "Jack!" "Jack Finehart!" "Come out, you — Texan." "Come in, boys," he drawled, getting his tools ready. Just as he stepped out, a cocked revolver in each hand, and a bowie-knife across his mouth, there was a roar of laughter from the crowd.

It was moonlight, and Jack was arrested in the act of opening fire. The leader then assured him that they simply wanted his assistance to run in hart." Stub Hawkins, a noted horse thief, off to Cottonwood. Jack put up his pistols in great dudgeon and disappointment.

On another occasion Jack was in New Mexico bar-room. A young New Yorker was talking a good deat, and Jack, in his drawling Texas humor or indifference (the quality resembles either) offended and insulted him without intent. Finally the New Yorker drew a seven-chambered pea-shooter and discharged every barrel at Jack Finehart. The desperado received the shots without moving a muscle, until they were nearly exhausted. Finehart had held his appointment only drawing quickly a pistol a foot long, he three days, having received it from the shivered the pea-shooter out of the Atchison Toncks and Santa Fe Buildend youngster's hand, and said:

'Stranger, buy a gun that won't disgrace this country. . He deliberately put his "gun" back and did not even look to see where the

New Yorker's shots struck. A young gentleman befriended Jack and won his everlasting devotion. Finehart was one of the most delicatelyorganized men I ever met. He was like a woman; only less ashamed of natural emotion. Jack heard of some danger impending over his friend. For three onths he dogged him day and night, ever hovering around him with two re volvers buckled about him. At last the night of the consummation of the scheme tention of letting out his life-blood with knives. 'Save me!" he contrived to scream. "That's what Jack Finehart has been waiting two months to do," cried the owner of the name, as soon as the smoke of revenge was at hand. Two men sprang upon the young man with the inom the shots had cleared off. Drawing and firing both revolvers at ace, he had pinked both assassins. Finehart had a powerful name in Texas, in Arizona, in Kansas, in New Mexico; not a gambler from Texas to the Black Hills but respected the name. An expert gambler, an unerring shot, unqualed as a companion on a spree, he was, nevertheless, scrupulously honest, tender-hearted, sensitive and easy provoked to tears. He had had one love affair, and it was the romance in his life. I don't know the history of it. Nobody did but Jack, and he was not communicative about it. It seems that his brother was equally involved about the girl, and, after much bitter feeling and exchanges had been indulged in between them respecting the lady, they came to an understanding thoroughly typical of the hard, uncompromising nature of Westhamlet. The frightful moral abandon ern quarrels. The understanding was to of border life in Texas is scarcely worthy the effect that the men pledged themern quarrels. The understanding was to selves never again to speak to the girl the penalty for an infraction of this rule being that one brother should kill the other. This was the compact. To anyone familiar with the history of the West there is nothing strange, unnatural or startling about it. The brothers separated, and each went his way. was some years ago. This summer Jack sought out his brother, and found him in Denver. He told him briefly that he had broken his oath, and wanted the compact kept. There was nothing about Jack's demeanor that indicated fear. He was melancholy and quiet. This was indeed his habitual manner. He was firm in his determination to die by his brother's hand. The witness to the compact was in Denver. He was found by Jack, and the fact was narrated to him. He offered remonstrances, of course; Jack was as firm as iron. His influence over the witness, and the desire of the latter to see it out and put in as many obstacles as possible induced him to accompany his friend. The brother was waiting, and they walked out on the Platte river bank. It was late in the afternoon. The sun was making countless beautiful shapes and colors over the mountains. The air was cool and dry, and the earth looked very fresh and green. It was a singularly inviting aspect, and the world never appeared more tempting as a place of residence. The men spoke not a word, but strode steadily along, Jack in front. The witness was alarmed and horrified. He knew not what to do. It was impossible to influence the men; but he could not back out. They at last reached a > his heart as the mark to shoot at. There the Texan stood, with his arms folded and an expression of quiet melancholy on his face. "I am ready," he said, casting a single glance at his brother, with whom he had previously shaken hands, and then turned his gaze toward the river. The brother leveled the pistol, took deliberate sim, pulled the trigger. The cartridge did not explode. Jack flung a quick glance at it, and, seeing his brother about to try again, once more gazed at the river. After another long aim the brother suddenly threw the pistol into the river and wheeled about. Jack ad-

The brother did not reply, but turned and walked toward home.

Jack followed with the greatly-relieved witness. He did not utter a word until they parted in Denver. He made repeated efforts to in face his brother to carry out the compact, and seemed more anxious to die the more he reflected upon his escape. He appeared to court death with moody anxiety, and long after this affair had ceased to torment him, this

"You ought to go somewhere, Jack," said his friend.

"There is not a spot in this western country where Jack Finehart is not in danger," he replied.

At 10 o'clock he was attending to his duties as yard-master. A switch-engine was going down the yard behind a passenger train, and Jack, knowing the engineer to be a Denver and Rio Grande man, and being distructful of him. jumped on the step and rode along with him. The ricketty engine was going very fast. It went off the rails and fell over, and yardmaster Finehart was crushed to death and badly mutilated. The engineer was also killed.

To think that a man who was covered from head to foot with knife and pistol scars; a man whose death was many times due, perhaps, from the hands of other men, should meet it at last by a railroad accident! His funeral was attended by great numbers, and, as he lies in the cemetery, one sees over his grave only the simple inscription, "Jack Fine-

How the Country Seems to a New York Tenement-House Child.

In this country one would not expect to find any city so environed that the aspect of the fields and woods is unfamiliar to the most poverty-stricken of its inhabitants, Every city has its parks and souares with foliage and flowers; the cople are migratory, and those who are stay at-homes have funumerable excursions within their reach. But the life of the very poor falls in a groove out of which their feet do not often stray. less the parks are in their own neighborhood, they do not visit them, the least costly of excursions, provided by managers in search of profit, are too costly for them, and in all large cities there is an increasing class imprisoned in alleys and tenements, to whom there is an unknown region dimly characterized as "the country." The ideas of what the country is, possessed by the children taken to it through the beneficence of the fund previously referred to, would be amusing were it not for their pathos. "I've been to 'the country' before. My pa once took me to Jersey City," said a ittle girl, as she was on the point of leaving New York. "So have I," said another with a burst of pride; and when she was asked what country, she answered "Ireland," probably from the fact "Ireland," probably from the fact that she had heard it spoken of by her parents as "the old country." Once beyond the city, and among the fields and hills, their interest and wonderment were unbounded. "How nicely the hills go up!" said one boy. "Who's been wetting the grass?" asked another, as he felt the morning dew. "Is it real?" said a third, as he felt the lawn; and when he was convinced of its genuineness, he threw himself upon it and folled over it and over it again. Every object had freshness and interest to them. Occasionally an incident became laughable, despite the pitiable ignorance that led to Several children at a village in New York asked for permission to play with the chicken-coops, and although the attraction of chicken-coops could not be understood by the farmer the desired consent was given. The playfellows came back in a little while, and it was evident that chicken-coops as a source of pleasure had fallen vastly in their estimation. When a reason was sought, one of the children explained that the flies "bit too hard," and on a further investigation it was discovered that the chicken-coops were the bee-hives, the inmates of which had severely opposed the experiments made upon them. -Sunday Afternoon for September.

"Man alive," exclaimed the Judge in a heated discussion of a tangled theological point with his friend, "I tell you, you are arvone." "Yes," Mr. Goodman, meekly, anyone." "Yes," Mr. Goodman, meekly. anyone." "Yes," Mr. Goodman, meekly, "but I do though." "Who?" shouted the Judge, "who?" "My wife, her two sisters and the baby," howled the good man, meekly triumphant. In none of her enterprises does Portland show her supremacy over other cities on the northwest coast more than in her wholesale trade, and in no branch of business has she made mere rapid strides than in furniture. Among the firms which have kept pace with the growth of Portland, and which to day stand high in the estimation of their felow merchants, and their customers, is the well known arm of Misses shistles & chabsons.

Mr. Shindler, the senior member, commenced business in this city in 1857 as a member of the firm of Hargren & Shindle who started a furniture establishment at the corner of First and Salmon streets. They con-tinued in business until 1873, when the great fire in August of that year reduced their fac-tory to ashes. The same year, through the excitions of Mr. Shindler the Oregon Furni-ture Manufacturing Company was estab-lished, he remaining vice-president and prin-cipal manager for three and one-half year. In Sep ember, 1877, Mr Shindler entered into partnership with Mr F. S Chadbourne, one of the largest furniture manufacturers and dealers in San Francisco, and began business on a grand scale at No. 106 First street, be tween Morrison and Yambili. The junio member, Mr. F. S. Chadbourne, is the princi pal partner of F. S. Chadbourne & Co., of dat Francisco, and is a most thorough merchant Mr. Shindler's reputation for integrity, ability and energy is so well known here as to reire no mention at our hands. Mr. F. S. Chadbourne is here on a business and pleasure trip, and Wednesday

AN EXCURSION TO WILLSBURG was planned to give the party an opportunity to see and admire the scenery along the banks of the river and to visit the factory.

At 10 o'clock A. M., Mesers. G. Shind, F. S. Chadbourne, D. N. Waiter of Sag Francisco, and an Okroosian reporter, started up the river on the east side in a barouche, behind a splendid team of bays. After arriving at Wilisburg, four miles north of this city, the party aligned and proceeded to inspect the factory. The main politics is two be shot dead.

The stranger did not move, but in astronished silence wiped the whisky from his face. Then Jack stepped up, took the pistol, and, pointing it between his eyes, said:

"Now, apologize for your lies and alope."

The man did all this very abjectly.

Jack and a friend were sleeping in a log cabin on the prairies in Texas, keeping dark for some very good reason. The night, the middle of the night, and results of the safety and long after this affair had ceased to torment him, this strange, restless desire to meet death by violence launted him. At three o'clock on the morning of his death (he remained up because he was filled with a suffocating sense that death was coming) he walked down Sixteenth street with a friend, and said:

"It's coming, coming, I feel it in the log that it is to know how, and I'd like to know how, and I'd like to know how it's coming.

contemplation for next season.

After inspecting the factory, the party sharpened their appetites by a brisk walk about the grounds, and then did ample justice to a finely prepared linch. They then drove up to Milwaukle, crossed to the west side and returned by the White House road. They stooped at the brick warehouse, northeast corner of Front and Main streets. The buse ment, 25x80 feet, is completely filled with chairs and furniture, in "knock down" state, ready for shipment to distant points where freights are heavy. The ground floor is also used for storing duplicare furniture and for he upholstering department. The party then drove to their Mesers, Shindler & Chadbourne have just furnished R. Saux's hotel at Lewiston and secured the por tract for all the interior fittings of Thos. Sarch's new hotel at The Dalles, now in process of erection. Being both man-ufacturers and importers their facilities are such that they can secure to purchasers every possible advantage, and all orders entrusted to their care receive the same attention as though the purchaser were there in person. Satisfaction is guaranteed in all cases.

It is a universal fact, and conceiled to by their competitors that this firm have the finest warerooms and most elegant stock of goods north of San Francisco, and there only urpassed in a few instances. HELMINTHOLOGY. -- Of late years no department of natural history has attracted more attention than that of the study of internal parasites in man and other animals. To the great multitude and variety of creatures thus found, associated by one common habit of life, have zoologists given the general name of Helminths, which are a peculiar fauna desminths, which are a peculiar fauna desminths of the common fauncies of the common fa py an equally peculiar territory. That territory is the wide-spread domain of the interior of living animal bodies to which, alas, poor humanity forms no exception. It is unpleasant to think that we may at any time become a prey to these dangerous and mischievous depredators. We were lead to these reflections by a recent visit to Dr. Van Denberg's office, when he had just completed the expulsion of 670 worms from Mr. Lehman, who stated that he had suffered for 12 years. They were all small, about one and a half inches in length, excepting one—a nondescript about three inches long, an attrocious rascal of forbidding appearance. Dr. Van Denberg is the great worm exterminator of the century. Read his advertisement in another column.

Another Slaughter.

I would state to the public that I have been afflisted for about ten years and decloring for hear-ly every complaint with many reputed good physicians, without any relief, until I consulted fr. Van Den Bergh, Sr., who said worms were the cause of my complaint. By taking five of his worm powders I passed 670 worms in five hours. They are about one and a quarter inches in length. Now all my allments and pains seem to have left me altogether. I reside at No. 127 tark street. Joseph Lensan. Postland, On., August 2d, 1879. Stark street.

Six Hundred and Eighty-Three Worms Expelled.

After suffering for 12 years and lying in one hospital for three months, and being stuffed and injected with morphine and drugged by many hysicians for this, that and such complaints, ti I consulted Dr. Van Denbergh, of No. 212 F. street, Portland. He said it was worms wh caused all my misery, and after taking 16 of hismall worm powders, I passed 683 harrible look ing worms, some measured one and one had inches in length, by three eighth of an inch is thickness.
