Another Road to the Interior.

In conversation with parties in Douglas county a short time since, we learned that W. B. Clark and others residing in Coles Vally are contemplating the survey of a wagon road from the settlements on Hubbard's creek in Douglas county to navigable waters on Coos river, early in the coming spring.

From the point where this road would enter the Coles Valley settlement to Oakland and Roseburg is about equal distance, both passing through a rich farming region, where good roads already exist.

Should the Coos Bay Wagon Road, now involved in litigation, fall into hands that refuse to incur the expense of repairing and putting it in a passable condition for wagons, it is morally certain that a road will be opened on the Coos river route; and once constructed, the latter will have so great an advantage in distance as well as grade, that it will be likely to accommodate a large proportion of the travel between Coos river and the interior.

A Short Session Probable.

There is a noticeable and unusual haste on the part of the various committees in Congress to get the regular appropriation bills of the session ready for passage. It is announced that it is the result of a conference between Speaker Randall and his Democratic associates, at which it was concluded that the Democratic party would be injured in the coming canvass by the prolonged session, and that it is desirable to adjourn by the first of May.

They seem to have decided to attempt no tariff or financial legislation at this session. The reason is, that the party is not united and cannot unite on any proposition relating to an important change in the tariff, or the finances. The great and ruinous mistake which they made in the extra session of last summer has made them timid; and, recognizing the fact that the present is a critical period, they wish to avoid assuming a decided position on these great questions.

They will denounce the existing laws and the party that enacted them, but are unable to unite upon any reformatory measure in the premises. They have not even confidence enough in any of their theories to risk the judgement of the country upon them, and to avoid the effect of possible blunders, they hasten to adjourn.

Needs Rest.

Tilden is reported as saying that the Robinson fight was not his fight. He was engaged in private affairs and could not manage it. When asked if he could carry his own State at the Convention, he said he undoubtedly could; that it was not a question of being nominated, but it was a question of election.

He thought the Democratic candidate could be elected but for himself, he wanted quiet and rest, and said he never was a candidate. While it is undoubtedly true that he "needs rest," and that he ought have it hence forward, there is every reason to believe that he is exceedingly anxious to become President, and that no voice but that of the people, either in the convention or at the polls will be accepted to consign him to that quiet, which for his own good as well as that of the country, he should enjoy.

The Navy Department.

Of the several departments of the Government, that of the Navy appears to have been managed with the greatest economy during the past year. Secretary Thompson has rendered his account for the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1879, and returned to the Treasury Department the sum of $1,500,000 as the unexpended balance of the appropriations for the Navy Department.

The entire appropriations by Congress was only a little over $13,000,000, says the Statesman. Such an occurrence as an unexpended appropriation has never before been heard of in the history of the Government, and for the past twenty years, there has never been a session of Congress where there has not been an application for money to cover deficiencies in the expenses of the Navy.

The Giant Motor.

All inventions promising improvements in the power by which machinery is propelled are matters of universal interest. The New York Commercial Bulletin says that the engineers of the marine underwriters and others to whom the knowledge of the fact has come, are deeply exercised by the successes in the application of the giant motor obtained from bisulphide of carbon mixed with petroleum, for which a patent was taken out by a Pittsburg firm last April.

It promises to revolutionize machinery motors. The motor consists in the transmission of the above chemical agents from the chamber of a condenser to the boiler of an ordinary non-condensing steam engine, the boiler being filled with water heated to about 200 deg. pressure. As high as 200 pounds per square inch is rapidly developed from the vapor thus generated and easily controlled.

Two Hundred Miles of Railway in 1880.

It is officially announced in New York, says a late dispatch, that the Oregon Railway and Navigation Co. have purchased steel rails, locomotives and equipments for 200 miles of standard gauge railroad, to be constructed in Eastern Oregon and Washington Territory during the year 1880.

Fifteen hundred tons of rails are now on board the ship Orient, soon to sail from Cardiff for Portland. One hundred miles will be built from The Dalles up the Columbia river to connect with the existing Walla Walla railroad; 50 miles more will be an extension of the latter to Snake river, and the remainder will connect Texas Ferry, on Snake river, with the heart of Palouse country.

San Domingo Besieged.

A Havana dispatch of the 4th of December, has the following: Advice from San Domingo to the 20th ultimo, say the siege of the city is now effective, the revolutionists having completely surrounded it on land. The only outlet is by sea. President Guillermo had made a last effort to dislodge the revolutionists on the 14th, attacking Monte Plata, but after a hard fight was routed and obliged to take refuge in the city, with a small escort as his army, and has disbanded.

President Guillermo is momentarily expected to resign. The city cannot support a long siege, as provisions are scarce. The whole Republic has joined in the revolution.

Beecher's Alleged Blasphemy.

Henry Ward Beecher, who has been distinguished for overstepping the customs of the ministerial profession in the manner of his speech, is charged by the World as using the following language. If he used this language, it is probable that it was in connection with further remarks which would qualify and explain it, and the publication of this extract, unaccompanied by the context, does him an injustice:

"Who was Jesus?" A peasant, a mechanic at a period of the world when workmen were very low in the social scale; and if one had asked who was the Divinity whom you worship, he would have said, Jesus. Of what country? Nazareth. Who were his parents? Joseph and Mary, reputedly. Who was his mother? Mary, who just escaped divorce through the magnanimity of her betrothed. Who was his father? No one—a bastard Jew. What was his country? Judea. What did he do? Worked as a carpenter in the shop of his putative father. What became of him? He was charged with a violation of the Roman laws, tried and convicted and put to death. A bastard Jewish mechanic: a malefactor put to death for violating the laws of his country! Is that the fellow you bring to me to worship? Now, if you look at things from the surface, Jesus was that and that only; and Paul, having the highest training, might easily have thrown over all the poetic veil of mystery.

Murder in Eastern Oregon.

A Weston dispatch of the 25th, announces that the Tuesday before, Jas. H. Turner, editor of the East Oregonian, killed a sheep herder named Harry Strobe. The circumstances are as follows: W. L. Black and Strobe had some words, when Strobe struck Black in the face, whereupon Turner took Black's place, and a fight ensued, Turner getting the worst of it.

Turner then went to his room, procured a dirk knife and sought Strobe, whom he found in Matlock's saloon. On seeing him, Turner went up to him and pushed him aside, when Strobe asked him what he meant; whereat Turner stabbed him through the heart, killing him instantly. Mr. Turner has hitherto borne a good character, and Strobe has been known as a hard case.

A SENTIMENTAL FLAME.—The Charlotte N. C., Observer tells of a citizen of that county, who, having married in 1843, lighted a fire on his hearthstone as soon as he carried his bride to his new home, and has kept it burning ever since. The citizen being questioned about the matter, says that through all these 36 years has never been allowed to go out. In reply to a question, he said that in summer weather, when it was necessary for comfort's sake to keep the fire burning very low, he had to get up frequently at night to replenish it slightly, but that he counted this as nothing when he contemplated that fire going out. He had evidently formed for it a strong attachment, and yet one would not take him for a sentimental man.

But this fire is to him a constant reminder of the day when he first brought home his bride. Around it his children have grown up into manhood and womanhood, and their children have gazed into its light. It was the last light that fell upon the eyes of his wife, and he hopes that it will be the last that will fall upon his. Viewed thus, his sentiments in the matter can be understood, and so strong is this sentiment that with the old man it amounts almost to a passion.

THE Toronto Mail announces the development of a gold mine, in the Chaudiere region, about six miles south of Quebec. Considerable excitement prevails; nuggets, in years past, been brought in from this region by lumbermen, but the washing of earth for dust, lately has been very successful. Americans have also lately purchased the mines at Modoc, which created a stir, some time since.
