The Tariff and the "Mail."

Some very wise man who signs himself "A Coal Miner," appears in the columns of the News to tell the people that the conclusions reached by the MAIL in an article published some weeks since on the tariff question, do not result "sylogistically" from the premises.

We conclude that he is a wise man, and also a very shrewd man, because, without attempting to show that the removal of the tariff on coal would result in anything else than the ruin of the leading industry of the Bay, he expects to carry his point by the use of unusual and high-sounding words.

But our learned friend wishes to help Siglin out in his business of working up a hobby, and he says: "It costs three hundred dollars towage on about seven miles on every average cargo shipped from our mines."

This comes under the head of shrewdness; it is only intended to be believed by men who never saw Coos Bay. There never was a cargo of coal shipped from Coos Bay on which towage was charged that was not towed much more than seven miles.

HON. JOHN BURNETT has said in various speeches that it is time the farmers and laboring men elected men from their own ranks to represent them. This is true; there is too large a representation of lawyers, too the working men vote for men who know what it is to earn their bread by the sweat of their faces; then their interests will be properly protected.

them in hope to achieve a temporary success, deserves, and will receive, the condemnation of the intelligent laborer, as well as of the employer.

A Corrected Version.

In the first issue of the News after Siglin's nomination, the following item appeared: "We are informed by a gentleman who attended the Democratic convention last Saturday, that we offered to sell Webster our interest in the News, prior to the last election, knowing that he would run it against the Democratic ticket. Now, we never had any conversation with Mr. Webster concerning the sale until long after the election, when he informed us that he was going to start a paper. We then said to him: 'You better buy the News and get an established business.' He asked about our price, and we told him $4000. He asked whether we had any objection to his examining our books; we had none; he examined them and asked us how much less we would take. We consulted with Mr. Bennett, and told him that was our price. He thought it was too much, and that ended it, and was all there was all there was of it.—Next."

We have been asked as to the correctness of the foregoing statement, and upon examination of a business memorandum of that year, we state the following as the facts with regard to the matter: Mr. Siglin first called on G. Webster at his office, March 21st, 1878, and offered to sell him the News, or his interest therein. On the 31st of March (Sunday) he mentioned the matter again. Not wishing to purchase Mr. Siglin's interest unless some arrangements could be made with Mr. Bennett, on the following day, April 1st, Mr. Webster called on J. W. Bennett, met him in front of the News office; told him what passed with Mr. Siglin, and asked what arrangements could be made about his interest. Mr. Bennett said he would not like to assist in running a Republican newspaper, but would sell his interest for the price that Mr. Siglin would take. After the Republican nominations were made, Mr. Webster consulted with Mr. Hacker, Dr. Tower, and David Holland, who was the candidate for Sheriff, as to the propriety of making the purchase, and the possibility of making payments, as well as the possible benefit to be derived from its influence in the canvass. Mr. Webster afterwards looked at the books, and being unable to get them down to what was considered a reasonable price, the matter was dropped.

If Mr. Siglin or any of his friends have doubt as to the correctness of this statement, we think there is available proof to satisfy him or them. The subject had never, to our recollection, been mentioned to or by us, till after the appearance of the above article in the News.

Protective and Revenue Tariff.

Mr. Siglin, realizing the damaging character of the Democratic tariff resolution, tries to dodge the issue by making a difference between a revenue and a protective tariff; he hopes to bewilder his readers by fictitious propositions and false representations. Any duty or tariff collected on an imported article that can be produced in the United States, is both a revenue and a protective tariff. Its object may be revenue, yet it has the effect to protect our home industries and to afford a benefit to our manufacturing interests. A protective tariff also brings revenue to the extent that imports may be brought into the country while it exists.

Again, he resorts to the statement that the present tariff on iron is $28 per ton. This is not true. He says: "If the tariff on iron and other merchandise reduced from $28 to $10, a large commerce would grow up, etc." Now, the present tariff on pig iron is only $7 per ton; on railroad bars $15 per ton; scrap iron $5 per ton; wrought scrap iron $8 per ton, and generally varying from $8 upward. We do not presume that Siglin made a mistake; of course he knew what he was writing about. He says he would rather be called a rogue than a fool, therefore we assume that he thought he could humbug some voter and get his support. This kind of work may be acceptable to a few, but it will not do for a champion of honest laboring men.

MR. SIGLIN and Mr. Moore are just now for the first time the would-be representatives of laboring men. If working men think they are better representatives of labor than Jerry Haynes and Wm. Morris, why, support them.
