A pharos on Cape Blanco gleams, And throws its beams far out to sea; As twilight deepens so my dreams Grows sombre, but the beacon srteams A ray across to me.

A sea-bird softly hovers here ; As it draws near, it seems so lorn, Its wail steals gently on the ear;

It must have lost its mate, I fear—Bereft, perhaps, that morn.
Why does its this crest? this crest? Wierd darkn are at rest,
All sleep but it and me. in the west;

Here I have watched the surf's turmoil -Have seen it boil, majestic, grand, And haul rocks in with its recoil, And throw great logs upon the soil, Above the shifting sand.

Each rock that in the offing looms, The foam illumes with diadem. They are my comrades; billows booms, When I am laid among the tombs, Shall be my requiem.

Ye mountains of the troubled sea, Eternity! how high ye reach! No more your watcher I can be; No more enjoyment left for me-Adien to Ophir Beach.
