BLOSSOMS.

A thousand rays from the morning sun
Among the leaves are playing,
And, filled with joy for the day begun,
Are the blossoms lightly straying.
And glad hearts answer to the sound,
As the birds are wildly calling,
While, eddying gaily 'round and 'round,
Are the apple blossoms falling.

The hours glide by, and the breezes die,
Yet the sunbeams linger 'round us,
And we dream away the noon of day,
Content as the dawn had found us.
For the blossoms are fair that Hope doth bear,
And sweetly her voice is calling,
While soft and white, in the golden light,
Are the apple blossoms falling.

A shadow over the heaven creeps,
And the evening winds are sighing;
The night comes on and softly weeps
For the day so quickly dying.
And my heart sinks low with a nameless dread,
For faint Hope's voice is calling,
While slowly and sadly from overhead
Are the cold, wet blossoms falling.

And I heed not the winds that mournful pass,
Nor the shadows that closer assemble,
Nor the form that comes o'er the bending grass,
Where the dew-drops softly tremble;
But my heart beats wild with a joy unknown,
For a voice in softly calling,
That tells me that I stand no longer alone
'Neath the apple blossoms falling.

And, though they appear no more this year
Through the soft air lightly blowing,
No thought I'll allow for the empty bough
Or the perished blossoms, knowing
Love will not fly, though the flowers die
Till again spring's voice is calling,
But over way, from day to day,
Are its snow-white blossoms falling.

HINTS TO YOUNG MEN.

Extract from an Address by D. A. Long, President of Antioch College, Ohio.

Will you pardon me if I detain you a few minutes with a few suggestions? I trust you will always bear in mind that my only object in view, in talking to you myself or in asking others to address you, is to be useful to you in your life work, to throw out such hints and cautions and to give such specific directions as will aid you to become all that the fond hopes of your friends anticipate, and all that your own hearts ought to desire. The mighty minds which have gone before us have left treasures for our inheritance, and the choicest gold is to be had for the digging. The greatest colleges and the wisest professors cannot make the son of a wise man wise. Marcus, the son of Cicero, was sent to Athens, and had the first masters that could be procured. What was the result? The son of Rome's greatest orator would not work and remained a blockhead. Young gentlemen, there is a dangerous word in the English language. The word is GENIUS. Many boys train themselves into odd habits, glory in eccentricities, thinking that some ignoramus will point to them and say, "There goes a genius." There are young ladies, too, who, like the lady in Dr. Young's satire, "drink tea by stratagem." If there ever was a real genius I think Sir Isaac Newton was one. With great modesty he said: "The great and only difference between my mind and the minds of others consists solely in having more patience." The freshman might ask what you mean by Patience. The knowing soph. would reply, "Listen to me; don't you remember that during the last term in a preparatory that the professor told you that Demosthenes was the prince of Grecian orators? His speeches against Philip, marked by such keen satire, were called Philippics." Then, the junior would remark, I suppose he was a hard student. Yes, yes, said the grave senior. He had a dark cave for a study. For fear he might be tempted to visit the ladies too often, and spend too much of his time in gay and idle company, he shaved one side of his head. He used a lamp. His orations smelt of the lamp. He copied Thucydides and Livy with his own hand. The senior then paused and said, I would tell you more about Demosthenes, but the students in the B. preparatory class can tell you all about the way he put pebbles under his tongue and how he spoke to the waves.

Well, well, you want to be original. That is right. Your teachers want to see original compositions. True originality consists in doing things well and doing them in your own way. No man was ever great by imitation. Even when a great man undertakes to imitate another great man, he always finds it easier to copy the objectionable parts. Lysistrachus taught Alexander the Great to admire Achilles. Aristotle could not correct his false notions in regard to that hero. When the Macedonian conqueror came to imitate Achilles, what did he do? He imitated one of the most cruel actions in that hero's life. He dragged the governor of a town through the streets after his chariot. France murdered Louis XVI. because England once beheaded a king. Those who have tried to follow in the wake of Byron have too often borrowed his villainy without his genius. You must have a character of your own. We cannot copy either greatness or goodness. "Nil sine magno vita labore dedit mortalibus."

Did you ever wonder why some people have started out with a few dollars and now own such beautiful farms? Why they have read so many books and acquired so much information? Industry is the key to the whole secret. "He that shall walk with vigor three hours a day will pass, in seven years, a space equal to the circumference of the globe." There is no state so bad for the student as idleness. Any student who neglects a known duty, naturally seeks to crowd his mind with something that may bar out the remembrance of his own folly. When I see little boys and girls walking across our beautiful campus, or straying away from their mothers about the glen, I think in my heart I see, "Innocence Abroad." When I see young people, whose parents have worked hard, denied themselves of the comforts of life in order to give their children an education, and see the children neglecting their duties in our colleges, in our villages, in our cities, I think in my heart that I see "fool's at large."

The Turks and Spaniards have two proverbs which Solomon fails to mention: First, "A busy man is troubled with but one devil, but the idle man with a thousand;" second, "Men are usually tempted by the devil, but the idle man positively tempts the devil."

CULTIVATE PERSISTENCE. Students are often undecided about what occupation or profession they will follow. They adopt a plan. Such a man did this. Such a woman did that. I will do so, too. As soon as the way appears hard they become discouraged. I once read of a student who read the motto of a great man—"Deum loquimur tempus fugit." He placed it in capitals over his room door. Again, he read that Daniel Webster admired Blackstone. Then he concluded to drop everything and take up Blackstone. He read for a short time with great eagerness. He picks up a paper stating that Oliver Ellsworth got most of his information from conversation. So he dropped Blackstone and undertook to go from room to room to gather information by conversation. A college full of such pupils would never set a river on fire. By and by a book agent visits the college. Now he sees the way to make a fortune. What a mistake. Here is a young lady studying the dead languages. A friend calls and tells her she is wasting her time. She changes her plan and gives all of her time to mathematics. Then comes another friend, and with a grave and sapient face asks what advantage Euclid can be to any one, unless they expect to be a college professor. A self-conceited young man calls and remarks that the young ladies ought to give more attention to culinary affairs. She makes him give his sickly mustache another twist when he says, "If you are looking for a cook, simply, you have called at the wrong place." Yet, I hope every young lady in Antioch college knows how to fry a good steak and make nice batter-cakes and prepare a good cup of tea. My dear young ladies, don't allow your mothers to get breakfast for you the day after you return from Antioch. My dear young gentlemen, don't remain in bed until you are called for breakfast when you get home. Go out early, feed the stock, build the fires, attend to all the work, and let your dear parents have a little rest. Show them that Antioch college did not encourage laziness.

SOLOMON TELLS US THAT MUCH STUDY IS A "WEARINESS TO THE FLESH." Written examinations were never thought of by him, yet they have the same effect. Your nerves have been reached. You are more or less liable to be irritated. Yet, you must not become peevish and fretful. That would be so naughty. Goldsmith could write "The Citizen of the World," "The Deserted Village" and "The Vicar of Wakefield," and write so many kind-hearted and pleasant things, yet, in private, he was peevish. Be frank and open-hearted all the time. Not merely appear so, but really be so. I must not detain you more than two minutes longer. You come forward with the history, the experience of all other nations before you; and at your feet lie pictures of men whose example it will be honor, and glory and immortality to follow, as well as of men whose example is death. Under the full, the pure, the purifying light of the Gospel, you are called to live and act. If you live for God, fulfill the high destiny which is before you, you have thousands all around you to cheer you onward, to strike hands with you and go forward as agents of benevolence whose aim it is to bring many sons and daughters to glory. Above you are the pious dead, watching around your steps, and ready to minister to your wants. And there, high above all principalities and powers, sits the everlasting Redeemer, holding a crown which shall shortly be yours, if you are faithful to Him. He will be near you. You shall never faint. Every sin you conquer shall give you new strength; every temptation you resist will make you more and more free in the Lord; every tear you shed will be noticed by your great high priest; every sigh you raise will reach His ear. Up, then, my dear students of Antioch! up, and gird on the armor of God. Enlist under the banner of Jesus Christ, and let your powers, your faculties, your energies, your hearts, all, all be His. Bright and glorious is the day before you; white and full are the fields that wait for you; girded and strong are the companions who will go with you; beautiful upon the mountains shall be your feet wherever they carry the tidings of mercy.

Girls in Roumania.

[From the Pall Mall Gazette.] Roumania is famous for the facility of its divorce and the laxity of its morals. It is, however, not so generally known that the usage of the latest society in Europe imposes the severest restraint upon the innocent social intercourse between the young of both sexes. A lady writing to us from Bucharest sends us the following dismal account of the way in which the Roumanian Mrs. Grundy tyrannizes over the unmarried women: "Girls have very little liberty here. If a gentleman is seen dancing more than twice during the same evening with a young lady he is as much compromised as the unhappy maiden herself, and immediately pounced upon by a score of relatives demanding his intentions. No conversation can take place between the young couples, as, directly after the dance, the gentleman must trot his partner back to the maternal lair. A young girl is allowed to have little or no intercourse with men, and a harmless flirtation would be ruinous to her reputation in Bucharest. How can a girl's mind develop under these and accompanying circumstances? No wonder she accepts the first offer of marriage as a means of emancipating herself; neither is it astonishing that men never trouble themselves to talk for any length of time to an unmarried lady. As might be expected, this system of restriction is very far indeed from tending to morality.

The following resignation of a country judge was recently sent to the governor of Arkansas: "I have got enough of this blamed office. I took this here place expectin' to be respected, but mud has been flung at me ever since. The temperance people an' the still-house folks have been pullin' at me all the time, an', finally, when I concluded to go with the still-house folks, the temperance people 'lowed I didn't have no sense an' was an ole fraud; jes' like a man didn't have a right to do as he pleases in this here free country. Well, they kep' on a-barkin' an' a-barkin' till I 'lowed that maybe I was wrong, so turned over to the temperance people. Then the still-house folks 'gun ter howl, an' I swore that I was a fool an' a thief, now. So you see, I don't know which way to turn, an' I want say right here that you may take the blamed office yourself."

A scientific paper announces that in its issue will appear an elaborate article, entitled, "How to Handle Bees." Now a bee is not a difficult thing to handle. He is as easily picked up as a strawberry and is reasonably light and comprehensible. To handle him is, therefore, a mere song. Any man can do it. In fact the more ignorant of bees the man is the more easily he can handle one. The main difficulty seems to be in quelling the man down after he has handled a small but frolicsome bee. There have been men known to race around a ten-acre lot and eventually lose their salvation after handling one bee for the tenth part of a second. The scientific journal means well, no doubt; but what the country really needs is an article on how to avoid handling bees.

Little Rudolph one day begged an invitation to dinner at the house of a little friend with whom he had been playing in the morning. At the table his hostess anxiously inquired, "Rudolph, can you cut your own meat?" "Humph!" said Rudolph; who was sawing away, can't I? I've cut up a great deal tougher meat than this at home."

A gentleman bought a newspaper and tendered in payment a piece of forty soles. The newspaper woman: "I haven't the change; you can pay me as you pass along to-morrow." The gentleman: "But suppose I should be killed to-day?" The newspaper woman, "Oh, it wouldn't be a very great loss!"

In the opinion of Jeff. Davis the national democratic convention must nominate Tilden and Hendricks or be guilty of gross ingratitude. The ticket would be certain to sweep the south.

A Slight Misapprehension.

[From the Burlington Free Press.] Last Sunday morning one of the pastors of the little village of Pownal was walking to church, when he saw a man, with his coat off, digging in his garden. The good man beheld with grief and astonishment, and coming up to the man began to reprove, in a solemn voice, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days thou shalt labor and do all thy work—"

"See here," said the man in the garden, looking up, "be you talkin' to me?"
"Yes, my poor man, I am."
"Wal, you needn't worry 'bout me, then. I ain't a-goin' to do any work—I'm only diggin' worms to go a-fishin' with."

A wise man takes the trouble to inform us, in a very excellent article, that "in the seventeenth century, on the continent, boots were never worn without spurs." And we can inform him that in the nineteenth century, on this continent, with the single exception of the state of Georgia (where in summer time, it is said, the major wears nothing else) spurs are never worn without boots.

"What kind of a looking man was it that called Jones a liar?" asked Mrs. Bangle of her husband. "Oh! he was short and stout, with blue eyes, light hair and a nose reponse—"

"Nes reponse, my dear," corrected Mrs. B. "Reponse means hammered or pounded." "Thank you, love," rejoined Bangle. "Then that is just the word to describe it when Jones got done with him."
