CLEAR THE WAY.

What though a thousand years and more
We have trod the threshing floor,
And our richer, fiercer neighbor
Scathed the germ of our labor—
Garnished with the grain,
Leaving but chaff as our sole gain?
Lo! what light the east is brightening!
Herald of a better day.
Yonder cloud that towers o'er us,
Lurid with the threat of lightning,
Specter-like shall fade away
In the splendor of its ray;
A happier era's just before us!
When banners fringed and fluttering pride
In oblivion deep shall hide.
When Force shall yield the earth to Truth,
And Right shall reign in fearless youth.
The token of its advent thicken!
How life and hope, responsive quicken!
There's a flower about to bloom
In the desert, on the tomb;
There's a light about to glow
That will dispense the doom;
With waters such as ne'er were tasted
By the workers woe and waded.
Fellow toilers, hail the day!
Wait as patient as the day;
Watch and wait, but clear the way!

Two Pictures.

[Attchion (Kansas) Champion.]

The features of James G. Blaine have been familiar to the people of United States for years; and the likeness of Grover Cleveland are now coming into circulation.

Now that the opportunity is afforded, Americans who believe in the science of physiognomy are invited to "look on this picture and then on this."

The face of Blaine is that of genius; the face of Cleveland is that of a beef eater. The eyes of Blaine have a shine in them that speaks of a warm heart and a brave and impetuous spirit; the eyes of Cleveland look straight ahead with the fixed gaze of a wooden Indian. Both are large men; but Blaine is the massive development of size in bone and muscle, while Cleveland's is the continual deposit of fat and the growing unwieldiness of bowels. Blaine's forehead is both broad and high, betraying both intellect and fervor; Cleveland's is round and bulging, revealing nothing in particular, save, possibly, stubbornness. Blaine's general air is that of a man of family and society, who can amuse children and say gallant things to women; Cleveland conveys the impression of a hulking old bachelor, who hates babies, and who is awkward as a rhinoceros in the society of ladies. Blaine has a face to be remembered; Cleveland has a countenance which is liable to be mixed up in your mind with a score of other faces of fat men you have seen in hotel offices in different parts of the country.

Of course it will be said that this is a partisan estimate, but we are willing to let any impartial person—if such exists in the United States—take good portraits of both men and judge the universal, but unwritten, rules which govern men in estimating their fellow men "on sight," and we will venture something handsome on the conclusion of such a judge will not differ materially from that here given.

Oregon.

The following, says the Coquille Herald, is a brief essay on Oregon, or it may be better to call it a compilation of facts, by Miss Ella Belien of the Norway school. It may encourage others in their efforts to improve; therefore, we give it place:

Oregon lies midway between the equator and the north pole, and in the north-western part of the United States. It is about 290 by 390 miles in extent. Its area is about 95,200 square miles. Its population is about 183,869. It contains two great mountain ranges. The highest peak is Mt. Hood, 14,000 feet. Between these ranges lies the beautiful valley of the Willamette, about 50 miles wide, and 140 in length. The Cascade range divides the state into what is known as Eastern and Western Oregon. The Columbia is the largest river in Oregon, and is about 1400 miles in length. Oregon possesses a mild and healthy climate. The variation in temperature is less than that of the Atlantic states; this is owing to the warm Japan current which washes its shores, and to the warm winds which blow over it in winter. In Oregon, crops never fail for want of rain. The production of vegetables and fruit is abundant—wheat, oats, barley, apples, pears, plums, cherries, etc. Great numbers of sheep, cattle and horses are raised. Gold, silver, cinnabar and iron are found in different portions of the state. Coal has been discovered in several places, the principal discovery being in Coos county. Iron is now being mined near Portland. The principal manufactures are boots, shoes, flour and woolen goods. The principal articles of export are wheat, lumber and canned salmon. Oregon was organized into a territory in 1848 and a state in 1859. Disputes which arise between this country and Great Britain, in reference to the northern boundary of Oregon, were settled by a treaty which fixed it on the parallel of 49 degrees north latitude.

There are 971,857 more males than females in the United States, but in most of the states females predominate. Universal statistics show that the population of this world at birth is divided very nearly equally between male and female. Examination of comparative statistics would doubtless discover that the reason of the excessive male population of this country lies in the fact that there are more male than female immigrants. It would be found, if facts were known, that the excess of females in certain districts of Ireland, Germany, Scandinavia and other countries from which we derive the bulk of our immigration is fully equal to the excess of males in this country.

The most inexcusable instance of poking fun at Carl Schurz comes from the London Spectator. That journal says Schurz controls the German vote in the United States. Schurz does not even control his own vote. He sometimes makes an effort to do so, but along comes the promise of an office, or along comes the prospect of a pension, and he will make, and his vote is snatched up and carried off and deposited for the man who promises or the man who pays.

A tariff "for public purposes" exclusively means exactly the same as "for revenue only" and it is in direct opposition to the republican theory of protection for American labor.

It is estimated that the total amount of dividends paid in New York on the first of the present month amounted to $50,000,000. In Boston they aggregated $10,000,000.

"Cut Tammany out of the party," exclaims a virtuous demagogue. "Where would the party in New York be, without Tammany?"

A GOOD WIFE.

The Career of Mrs. John A. Logan—How She Aids Her Husband in His Public Duties in Washington, and How She Will Work for His Success in the Campaign.

The most enthusiastic woman supporter of the republican cause in the United States. And she is ready and able to do a great work in the campaign. It has been said time and again that Mrs. Logan writes her husband's speeches; that she has had more to do with the grammatical meshes which grow thick and fast over a neglected education. Whether this be true or not, those who know Mrs. Logan best know a well-educated and modest woman whose love for her husband is strong today as when in her earlier and poorer days she became his wife. A few friends, in conversation several evenings ago with Mrs. Logan, referred to the numerous labor which the general's nomination would impose upon her.

The lady modestly replied, according to a writer in the Philadelphia Times: "A great deal has been said at different times about the assistance I render to the general in the performance of his public duties. I aid him by relieving him of many details, but it is not right to say that I write his speeches, because it is not correct. I take charge of his correspondence, and I do this because the general is very conscientious. I read all his letters and lay all their contents before him. Most public men are at the mercy of their private secretaries, who do not have their interests at heart, and who often abuse the confidence reposed in them.

"Every correspondent making a reasonable request is entitled to some sort of a response. The general has never deceived any one, because he has known the contents of all his correspondence. I have also done much copying and have marked authorities on various subjects upon which he proposed to speak. I belong to that class of American women who feel that the glory of their husbands is their glory, and rather to shine in the reflected light of my husband than to put myself forward. It has always been my sole ambition to be a good and useful wife and a true mother. I have been the companion of my husband, and think this is the sole ambition of the great mass of American women, as it should be.

A REMARKABLE WOMAN.
The conversation then turned upon a few of the details of this remarkable woman's life. This simple narrative presents many lessons which the younger generations of American women might apply with profit to themselves and the happiness of the world at large. We do not think it a violation of the confidence of a private conversation to give them the benefit of the example of this true type of American womanhood. The general's nomination of Logan goes back to a sturdy Irish settler of Virginia and a French pioneer of Louisiana. Her great-grandfather, Robert Cunningham, of Virginia, was a soldier of the war for independence, after which he removed to the state of Alabama and thence to Illinois, when still a territory, and there he was killed. Her mother was Miss Elizabeth Fontaine, of a distinguished family of that name which had arrived in Louisiana during the "great conspiracy" of 1791, and had since journeyed up the Mississippi river and settled in Missouri. It was here that John Cunningham met his bride, and it was near the present village of Sturgeon, in Boone county, Missouri, that they were married. Mrs. Logan was born on August 16, 1838. When she was one year old her parents removed to Illinois and settled at Marion, in Williamson county. It was here that the mother and her eldest daughter, then but nine years old, shared the dangers of a frontier home and cared and solicited of a growing family, when the husband and father were absent from the land of their country upon the parched plains of Mexico, and brave the trials and privations of a miner's life in the Sierras of California. This courageous and dutiful girl, who later became the wife of a man of strong, of most of the household work, and still found time to attend the primitive school of the neighborhood and train herself in useful needlework.

HER CHILDHOOD.
The father felt a just pride in his eldest daughter. The assistance which she had rendered her mother during his long absence in Mexico and California had even been mentioned to her by her father, and her love of study had prompted him to give part of his own income to her proper education. Accordingly, in 1853 the daughter was sent to the convent of St. Vincent, near Northfield, N. Y., a branch of the Nazareth institute, the oldest institution of the kind in the country. This was the nearest educational establishment of sufficient advancement in the higher branches of knowledge. The young girl received a Baptist education, and she joined the Methodist church, the church of the Logan family. Having graduated in 1855, Miss Cunningham returned to her father's home at Shawneetown. It was here that she had aided her father as sheriff of the county, clerk of the court and register of the land office in preparing his papers. Those were not the days of idleness and inactivity, as she accordingly the father depended upon the daughter to make copies for him. While Mary Cunningham was thus aiding her father in his official duties, John Logan was prosecuting his studies in the law at the University of Virginia. He had known Father Cunningham, and was his warm friend. He had known the daughter as a little girl. In 1855 they were married, and at once went to the young attorney's home at Belmont, Franklin county. The bride was 16 years of age, but her young life had already been one of usefulness to her mother, and of great service to her father.

HER MARRIAGE.
The young wife immediately installed herself in the place of companion and helpmeet to her husband. She accompanied him on all his professional journeys, an undertaking in those days of wilderness and no roads, into camp, great endurance and privation. In 1856 the devoted wife saw her husband triumphantly elected a member of the legislature, and in the famous Douglas and Lincoln senatorial contest he was elected as Democratic candidate. The lieutenant was a man of sterling qualities, and a love match and happy marriage followed.

Cleveland was not nominated on account of his having been a long-time; it was because no body knew what had been, and the hope was that nobody would find out.

KITTY'S PRAYER.

No, my dear—abridged, old boy,
I've shut down on that sort o' thing!
'Twill be a mighty long time, you bet,
Before I'll take a swing.
Yes, it's all very nice for the fellow,
To go out and "plant" the town;
You say you won't, but just keep it up,
And see how you'll feel when you're down.

I'll tell you how 'twas, old fellow:
I was loafing around the town;
Money was out and grub was scarce—
You can bet my heart was down.
Most all that I had was put in socks,
'Twas a pretty hard way to get 'em,
'Hard up' don't express the fit I was in,
But how hard up nobody knows.

Well, I met my Kitty one evening,
And I looked like I had been on a spree.
I hadn't 'twas sickness, without any 'stuff';
One can't say I was drunk, if ye see.
I'll tell you I felt sort o' 'tired,'
When we started to take that walk,
Till something the darkness changed to light,
List'nin' to that girl's talk.

At last she said, as we parted:
'I'll pray for you, dear, to-night—
Pray, as I've often prayed before,
You'll have strength to do what's right.'
I'm a pretty hard fellow to get 'em,
But, old boy, if ye know, I swear,
(For I struck my luck the very next day.)
That the Lord heard Kitty's prayer!

—Lester Opinion.

CLEVELAND, THE SAINT.

Something for Those, to Read Who Think He is Such a Superior Man.

The following has been received by Rev. C. R. West, editor of the Advance, a leading Baptist paper of Chicago:

Dear Advance:—I have just received from you a copy of your issue of July 12, 1884. Dear Advance:—It may be too late to do you any good and may not be needed, but I feel moved to warn you against saying much to the credit of Grover Cleveland. He is a liar. No Christian should endorse his crimes so far as to commend his candidacy. About seven years ago he seduced the head of the cloak department in Flint & Kent's, leading merchants here. He kidnapped the woman, she was born, sent her to the Catholic insane asylum and took the child from her. She escaped, got Milo W. Whitney to help her, finally settled and gave up the child for good. This is a well known fact. He kidnapped the wife of a man named Ken, who was a Buffalo pastor of eminence and piety to several religious papers of Chicago and New York. He seduced the wife of a man named Ken, who was a Buffalo pastor of eminence and piety to several religious papers of Chicago and New York. He seduced the wife of a man named Ken, who was a Buffalo pastor of eminence and piety to several religious papers of Chicago and New York.

The New York World says Governor Cleveland has received several letters from prominent Canadians, expressing the hope that he may be elected. Cleveland is very natural. Blaine is too intensely American in his views to suit subjects of the British crown.

Hendricks has been a "lame duck" for several years. He will not add any strength to the ticket. McDonald, although a man of less ability, has much more popularity, and would have been a stronger nomination.

Gen. Rosecrans is not at all pleased with the nomination of Cleveland. He says he represents the capitalists and not the labor of the country.

They call Ben Butler "the cyclone of destiny." Perhaps he may prove a cyclone to tear the democratic party to pieces.

If Cleveland represents an idea or principle, we would like some skilled friend of his to explain what it is.

That exciting war whoop, "Turn the rascals out!" no longer appears in the columns of the New York Sun.

A great many active and influential young democrats in Virginia have declared for Blaine and Logan.

The secret is out why the Harpers oppose Blaine. They wanted to print his book and failed to get it.

Ben Butler's analysis of the tariff plank in the democratic platform cannot be improved upon. It is clear-cut and exposes the hypocrisy and double dealing of the financiers with a master hand. He said he objected to the tariff plank in the platform because it took the committee so long to frame it, and if it took these gentlemen so long to frame it and get it in form, there must be some reason for that. If they could not find out in 36 hours what they wanted, how were the laboring men to find out what it meant? There was a radical difference between the committee and himself. The very able chairman of the committee (Morrison) thought there should be no such thing (or could be no such thing) as protection to American labor by taxation. He (Butler) believed that there should be such protection, such fostering, such cherishing. Morrison could not yield his convictions, and he (Butler) could not yield his, and therefore the committee had to speed all that time to say something that would mean one thing one way and another thing another way. He asked delegates to read that tariff plank, and see if they could find out exactly what it did mean. It did mean mean protection. If it did, Col. Morrison was too honest a man to bring it here, and yet it was so twisted that it might mean protection. The democracy had its platform in 1884, a plank of the most gallant soldier in the country, and now they had a tariff plank for "public purposes exclusively." Where was the difference? "Exclusively" meant "only" and "only" meant "exclusively."

The New York Truth supports Cleveland, but it says of the platform: "It straddles the question upon which it should have been outspoken, and in this way it must inevitably sacrifice much to gain a little. We are not sure that democratic policy would be as outlined by the democratic platform. It is easy enough to arraign the republicans after 25 years of power, but something more was expected of the democrats. Even the tariff plank was such an arraigning, for it is neither protection nor free trade—it is a bold declaration against the republicans for failing to reduce taxation, but it will not be overlooked that it is made in the face of the failure of the democratic house of representatives to let a tariff plank in the platform affirm; but either a democratic house should have made an honest effort to reduce the tax rates or the democratic platform should have said that the party means to do it. This issue is dodged by means of high-sounding phrases that mean nothing, and so the democratic platform is unsatisfactory in promising too little."

The New York World says Governor Cleveland has received several letters from prominent Canadians, expressing the hope that he may be elected. Cleveland is very natural. Blaine is too intensely American in his views to suit subjects of the British crown.

Hendricks has been a "lame duck" for several years. He will not add any strength to the ticket. McDonald, although a man of less ability, has much more popularity, and would have been a stronger nomination.
