It is easy to get one's voice heard in San Francisco. A man can hold a meeting in a saloon or other, and his voice will be heard by thousands. But it is not easy to get one's voice heard in Washington. A man can hold a meeting in Congress, and his voice will be heard by nobody but himself.

The Constitution of the United States is a great book. It contains many important principles, and it is a splendid work of legislation. But it is not easy to understand it. A man who has read the Constitution and knows what it says, can understand it. But he who has not read it, and does not know what it says, cannot understand it.
