MARSHFIELD, OREGON.
Thursday, August 20, 1885

An Australian steamer that arrived at San Francisco on the 10th inst. brought Walter Lennox Maxwell, who it is supposed murdered Arthur Preller at St. Louis, Mo., April 6 last, leaving the remains in a trunk at a hotel, after which he fled to Australia, via San Francisco. Maxwell declined to be interviewed. He was sent on to St. Louis.

If the man who locks the Oregonian forms will first lock tight from the sides and throw the form solid against the inside of the chase, and then lock from the bottom, the column rules will not work high and mar the appearance of the paper. In Ben Franklin's time power-presses were unknown, and his style of locking, including mallet, shooting-stick and wooden quins, will not do nowadays. Keep up with the procession, young man.

The interview with Gen. Longstreet, given a place on our first page, throws new light upon the relations existing between himself and Gen. Grant prior and subsequent to the civil war. Grant, as far as we know, was never censured for his friendship toward Longstreet after the war, but many southern people severely censured Longstreet for accepting favors from Grant. After reading that interview, no fair-minded man could consistently blame Longstreet for becoming reconstructed and pulling with the party that had the power to do so much that needed to be done for the south. The south had no better fighter than Longstreet, and when the cause was lost he gave up like a man. Had more of the chivalry followed his example they and their section of the country might have been in a better condition than they are to-day. It also stands out in the interview that the rebels were fortunate in surrendering to a man of Grant's magnanimity.

Gen. Grant was known as the "silent man," yet history does not tell of any distinguished general who was half as communicative to the enemy as Grant was in regard to important things that he intended doing. In this particular he was remarkably notable, and there was never any bragging or attempt at deception on his part. Grant always did exactly what he said he would do, and on several important occasions he gave the enemy every opportunity to meet him in full force, so that when he gained a victory it was complete. At Donelson, Grant sent word to Buckner that he intended to at once move upon the rebel works. He kept his word and took the rebels in. While Grant was besieging Vicksburg, and when there was an almost universal demand for his removal because of his delay in taking the place, he told President Lincoln, and the whole confederacy heard it, that he would take the city and dine there on the following 4th of July, and Lincoln turned a deaf ear to Grant's detractors and said that he should have the time in which he said he would take the place. A paper printed at Vicksburg July 2, 1863, made merry at the idea; but Grant was there, all the same, and ahead of time, to dine on the 4th. When Grant started for Richmond, by way of the Wilderness, he sent word to President Lincoln, and it was published to the world, the southern confederacy included, that he intended to go there by that route, if it took all summer. He so went, and finally took the confederacy in. The rebels never had any cause to complain of Grant's silence. Their greatest grievance was that he said too much and always fulfilled his sayings.

The democratic papers that are gushing over the economy of Cleveland's administration had better go a little slow until we have more of it and until a balance-sheet has been made out. The propriety of some of this administration's economy may be seriously questioned. For instance, it has disrupted the foreign mail service by refusing to carry out an act of congress appropriating $400,000 for the benefit of American vessels engaged in that service, and the mails are now forwarded in foreign bottoms, by which they reach Japan from San Francisco in 60 days, instead of 18, as heretofore. A very little of such economy as that will do the people of this fast age. Then the administration's economical raid on Roach has run him into retirement, and the three uncompleted government vessels at his yards are to be finished under the personal supervision of the secretary of the navy, which perhaps is a point that he wanted to make when he first went after Roach. Another prominent feature of this administration about this time is the strenuous efforts it is making to obtain gold from the bankers of the country to throw into the United States treasury, which, before the election, they so vigorously proclaimed was overflowing with wealth that belonged to the dear, poor people. It now appears that the only wealth worrying the democrats is silver, many millions of which they ask the bankers to take in exchange for gold. The most sensible way for the government to put silver into circulation would be for it to withdraw all greenbacks under $5 and let silver take their place, and not until this is done will silver be placed where it properly belongs. There are very few small greenbacks in circulation on this coast, and there is not now and never has been any too much silver for the use to which it can be put. The greatest trouble with most people is that they cannot get enough of it. The silver interest is one that it behooves the people of the entire country to look after and foster, for upon the successful mining of silver depends that of many other minerals, to make no mention of the many other industries in several of the states and territories that would fall with silver.

Surprising Statistics.

There is nothing like a good statistical table to overthrow preconceived notions. Ask anybody what state, territory or other division of the country is the most unhealthy, as indicated by death rate, and the answer is pretty sure to be wrong. Nobody thinks of the district of Columbia as more pestiferous in its climate and surroundings than South Carolina or Mississippi, with their swamp miasma and epidemic and fevers; and yet census tables just published show that the death rate is greater in the district of Columbia than in any state or territory in the union.

So, too, every resident of New England is accustomed to regard that region as healthful, while the New Englanders are few who would go to live at the south without feeling that they thereby added greatly to the risk of early death; and yet Massachusetts is less healthy even than Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia or South Carolina. The death rate in Massachusetts is 18.59, while in Mississippi it is only 12.89, in South Carolina 15.80, in Georgia 13.97, and in Louisiana 15.44. Indeed there is no southern state in which the mortality rate is so great as it is in Massachusetts, and only one—Arkansas—in which it is nearly as great.

Louisiana is commonly accounted one of the most unhealthy states in the union; most persons regard it, indeed, as first in the evil way; and yet the death rate there is only 15.44, while that of New York is 17.38 and that of Virginia 16.32. The statistics show that Louisiana has a smaller death rate than Arkansas, the district of Columbia, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, New Mexico, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah or Virginia.

Further examination shows that the six gulf states—Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas—constitute a more healthful region than New England or the middle Atlantic states. Considering each group as a whole, we find the mortality rate for the six New England states to be 16.03, that for the four middle Atlantic states 15.93, while that for the six gulf states is only 13.96. Even in the least healthful of the gulf states—Louisiana and Texas—the death rate is lower than the average mortality of New England or the middle Atlantic states. It should be observed, also, that the death rate in every southern state is swelled by the excessive mortality among the negroes, especially negro children, so that even these figures do not adequately represent the advantage possessed by the white population of the south over that of New England and the middle states.

California History.

The second volume of the history of California by Hubert Howe Bancroft was recently issued by the publishers in San Francisco. It covers the period from 1800 to 1850, showing the decline of the missions and reflecting in a far-off province the fitful political affairs of Spain and Mexico. It brings the story nearer to our own times and is, in this respect, more interesting than its predecessor; but, generally speaking, it preserves to us a portion of the past annals of North American history that of itself has an attraction for the student. Besides it supplies a missing link between the colonial days of Spain and the modern transformation therefrom. To comprehend the present fully we need a sketch of the past. This we find complete and thoroughly drawn in the volume referred to. It is a substantial businesslike work and presents a record that would be an advantage to any country—which leads us to the fact that the history of Oregon is being prepared in the same loyal manner by the same historian. In California II. Bancroft begins his "Pioneer Register," in which every worthy old-timer's name is enrolled with proper mention. This proves a feature of rare interest now and will grow in value as the years pass by.

Land Instructions.

Following are instructions relative to proof in support of pre-emption claims and commuted homestead entries: "The claimant must show at least six months residence next preceding date of final proof, which must be made 'on the day and at the place advertised.' Residence must be actual inhabitancy of and not occasional visits to the land. The party must actually reside upon, cultivate and improve the land for at least the period above mentioned. Persons doing business in town and residing there or elsewhere than on the land entered or filed for, or otherwise not actually living on the land, must not be allowed to acquire title thereto by pretext or assumption of 'constructive residence.' The character of the improvements and amount of cultivation must be such as will evidence entire good faith on the part of the claimant. Persons applying to give notice of their intention to submit proof should be advised that it will be a useless expenditure of time and money if they will not be able on the day fixed to show full and actual compliance with the law."

Alaska's New Governor in Oregon.

Last week Hon. A. P. Swineford, the newly-appointed governor of Alaska, accompanied by B. K. Cowles, John McKenna and J. C. Fuller, arrived at Portland. Capt. Cowles was recently appointed by Gov. Swineford commissioner to represent Alaska at the New Orleans exposition, and his object is to collect specimens. An appropriation of $2000 has been made for this purpose. McKenna is a deputy United States marshal. Fuller goes on private business, presumably to examine what our northwest possessions offer to the lumberman in the way of investment. The party will have to await the September

Curry County Callings.

At a meeting of citizens of Port Orford on the 8th inst. it was resolved to bridge Elk river this fall, and P. Hughes, Robt. McKennie and Capt. Tichenor were selected to choose a site, advertise for bids, collect funds, and receive or reject the work when finished.

O. Leneve is preparing to start a drug store at Port Orford. J. P. Russell and Jas. Olsen, of Floras creek, have this season raised crops of onions that equal in excellence the best imported from California. Jas. Lane has leased the Winsor hotel at Port Orford.

W. H. Averill has been low with lung fever. He is now convalescent. Wm. Albersson has disposed of the mail and stage route between Port Orford and Bandon to Elwood Carey. Judge Woodruff expects to complete the bridge at Eucher creek by the 1st of next month.

A man named Jordan recently sought and received employment as a teacher in the Cal Ranch district. He borrowed $17 from Rets, with which to buy a suit of clothes, and then a purse was made up with which to purchase books, etc., for the school, when Jordan departed for Port Orford to invest the coin and return on the 10th, but he has failed to materialize, and it is now the verdict of the people of the district that Jordan is a fraud and that they are out and injured to the amount placed in his hands. He is supposed to have come north. Lookout for him.

W. H. Carter, a bachelor, who has been living on Floras creek, near Bennett's postoffice, for the past two years, was found dead a few steps from his cabin last Saturday. A coroner's jury was held by Justice Volkmar of Myrtle Point, and the verdict was that Carter came to his death from heart disease, with which he was afflicted. He was formerly from Idaho and was for a time grand secretary of the Masonic fraternity of that territory. He had been dead 10 days or two weeks when found, and was in such a state of decomposition that it was hardly possible to give him a decent burial; and he was put in a canvas bag, as he was found, and thus buried on his own place, coffinless.—(Herald.)

Wages and Timber.

A circular put forth by mill owners at Bay City, Michigan, gives some interesting figures of wages paid for labor in lumber-making in the western states, of particular interest to lumbermen in this state and Washington territory. It was these rates against which the recent strike was made. In the highest wages column the highest figure was $5 and the lowest $3. In the lowest wages column only one firm reported as little as $1.12½, and none more than $1.50. The lowest average for all operatives in any one establishment was $1.01½ and the highest $2. These statements were made in answer to the complaint that men could not live on the wages. The highest wages column does not include superintendents, bookkeepers, or office workers. The circular cited above asks the question why manufacturers cannot pay as high wages as formerly, and answers it by explaining that their raw material, the standing timber, costs on the average $5 per thousand in place of seven cents of 30 years ago, and in the meantime the average quality has run down so that, in spite of increased prices for both better and common qualities, there is little if any margin on a formidable percentage of the total product. Those who have made the great profits are the owners of the standing timber, who, 30 years ago, bought the 6,000,000 feet, for which last year they received $30,000,000, at $1.25 per acre, or $240,000, from the United States government. It seems hardly possible that standing timber anywhere can be worth $5 per thousand, but it is a fact. The time will come, and, too, within 30 years, when available timber in this country will bring as much. A knowledge of this fact ought to make people careful to preserve our forests, instead of carelessly or wantonly destroying them.—(Oregonian.)

D. 1885, receive bids for building a bridge across Marlow creek, on the county road, on the east fork of the north fork of Coos river, in Coos county, Oregon; said bridge to be about 214 feet long; main span, 60 feet; rafter truss, 14 feet between bents; all to be done in workmanlike manner. By order of the County Court. J. J. LAMB, County Clerk.

A Murderer Lynched.

EUREKA, Cal., August 12.—A terrible tragedy took place on Mad river, in this county, last evening near the North fork mill. A woman named Amanda M. Towne, who was cooking at a logging camp, was murdered in a cabin, having her throat cut from ear to ear. Suspicion rested on a man named Henry D. Benner, who formerly lived with the woman as her husband. He was arrested and while in charge of a deputy sheriff was taken from the officer by a crowd of woodmen and perforated with bullets. Benner denied his guilt in the presence of the murdered woman, but circumstances point so closely to him that there seems to be no doubt of his guilt.
