DIABETES.

Description of a Most Distressing and Frequent Complaint.

The chief characteristic of this disease is an abnormal amount of sugar in the blood. The cause of it is quite uncertain.

According to Flint, it occurs in the vast majority of cases between the ages of forty and fifty; in men much often than in women.

It may exist a long time before it is not determined.

It often gives a fatal issue to otherwise mild diseases. Its chief test is a large percentage of sugar in the urine, the quantity of the latter, also, generally, of twenty, being increased.

Along the ear or symptoms are seen, a strong appetite, dryness of the mouth and acid saliva; later, inflammation, increasing muscular feebleness, and in many cases irritability, choleric and mental weakness. To it must be known in its early one third or more of its cases and consumption.

A diabetic patient, when the disease is once com rised, is liable to sudden death. The heart may fail from paroxysms of its nerves; or the blood person's cutting the brain, the person may sink into a state of insensibility, decrepitude and coma (total lethargy). A single cold may bring on this result.

So may in re coagulation and adhesion physical exertion, mental emotion, or any other.

Faint says: "The disease seems to me to be more herefor, provid proper treatment be adopted and persisted in." The main thing is to arrange for the patient a diet which excludes, as far as possible, sugar and carbohydrates, and in time rigidly to continue it.

One of the most wonderful of fishes is the one bearing the name of chiasmomniger, or the great swallower. The body is elongated, of nearly uniform thickness most of the length of the fish.
The jaws are very long and fitted with sharp teeth, some of which seem to be reversible. The manner of feeding is to grasp a fish by the tail and proceed to climb over it with its jaws. As the captive is taken in the stomach and integument stretch out, and the distended belly appears as a great bag. The fish will swallow another one six or twelve times its own size. This rapacity proves his own destruction sometimes, as the gas formed by the process of digestion makes a balloon of his stomach that brings the fish to the surface.

diers in the late war were killed in their first, third and fifth battles more than in any others.

Is the Sun Inhabited?

Sir David Brewster makes the following remarks relative to the sun: So strong has been the belief that the sun can not be a habitable world, that a scientific gentleman was pronounced by his medical attendant insane because he had sent a paper to the Royal Society, in which he maintained that the light of the sun proceeded from a dense and universal aura, which may afford ample light to the inhabitants beneath, and yet be at such a distance as not to be among them; that there may be water and dry land there, hills and dales, rain and fair weather, and that as the light and the seasons must be eternal, the sun may easily be conceived to be by far the most blessed habitation of the whole system. In less than ten years after this apparently extravagant notion was considered as a proof of insanity, it was maintained by Sir William Herschel, as a rational and probable opinion, which might be deduced from his own observations on the structure of the sun.—N. Y. Ledger.

It Was Raining.

Yesterday afternoon while the rain was pouring down a citizen left the post office to encounter an acquaintance who was also shil-dered by an umbrella.

"Raining, isn't it?" queried the first.

"Hey!"

"Raining, isn't it?"

"I'd like to see you a moment," was the reply. "Come up stairs."

The two passed up, traversed the dark hall to its darkest corner, and there No. 2 turned to No. 1 with:

"Do you take me for an infernal idiot?"

"Why, no, of course not."

"Do you suppose I'm carrying an umbrella simply to keep the sun off at this time of year?"

"No."

"I'm carrying it to keep off the rain, and I don't care a cent about the sun."

"Well, then, it rains. You know it rains.
Everybody in town knows it rains. Now, you go on and let people alone."

"But—but!"

"That's all. You let it rain. She knows her business. You just attend to your own affairs and let the weather alone. Good day!"

And he went clumping down stairs and left the other to follow at his leisure.—Detroit Free Press.

What She Would Do.

"I've brought Tommy with me. Yes," said Mrs. Flights, meeting Mrs. Smythe in one of New York's biggest and most bewildering dry goods stores. "I don't often bring him for I think there's great danger in having little children in one of these big shops or on the crowded streets. He wears a little medal with his name and the number of our residence on it, and I've taught him just what to say in case he should get lost, and I know just what to do myself. I'd keep perfectly calm and go right to police headquarters and give information there and then—why, where is the child? Tommy, where are you? Tommy! Why, why? Where did he go? Memory! What could we have to do with the child? Did you see him? Tommy! Good heavens and earth! He'll be killed in the crowd! Oh, what shall I do? Tommy, Tommy! I'll go crazy if I don't find him this minute! Where can he be? Oh, I shall faint!
I shall die if I have to go home without him.
Police! Help! My child! My child! I shall never see him again! I know I shan't! It will kill his papa! Tommy, my child, my child! O-o-o-h!"

And while they were bringing her out of her faint, Tommy came from behind a counter, where he had crept in search of a pasteboard box.—Hart in Time.

An Unlucky Man.

A—Have you ever had any experience in love affairs?

B—Well, I should say I had. In love I am the unluckiest of mortals. All the girls that I loved, and even some that I hadn't begun to love yet, were gobbed up by other fellows and married.—Translated from the German for Texas Siftings.

A Sad Loss.
