To be fully successful an agricultural fair needs something besides good horse races and large attendance. It needs exhibits. Remember that, and bring in something to help the display.

No one person can furnish a complete display for the fair. It takes the combined efforts of many. Let each person interested in the progress of Coos county bring in anything he may have to help the display.

The injured boy ran down the track and across the trestles to town and to Dr. McCormac's office where his burns were dressed. His hands and wrists were both badly burned inside and out, and his feet and ankles were painfully blistered though protected by a good pair of shoes.

These piles of burning slack are exceedingly dangerous, as they do not show that they are afire, but are like burning quicksand to any creature that blunders into them. E. G. Flanagan lost a good horse a year or so ago by inadvertently driving upon a pile of the stuff.

YOUNG BOY VICTIM OF PAINFUL ACCIDENT

Ray Campbell jumps into Pile of Burning Coal Slack—A Nervy Youngster

Ray Campbell, the 11 year son of Cliff Campbell, was the victim of a peculiar accident last Sunday, which resulted in some very painful though not dangerous burns.

In company with Al Sleep he went up the railroad track toward the Newport mine. A short distance this side of where the county road crosses the track their attention was attracted by a bush of peculiar appearance growing below the track and they started to examine it. At this point the coal slack with which the track is ballasted is afire, but shows no surface indication of the fact. The little fellow jumped down from the track and at once sunk above his shoe tops in the burning slack. In his attempt to scramble out, he fell and thrust his hands into the pile, when the Sleep boy came to the rescue and dragged him out. Young Campbell was much the cooler of the two boys, and compelled his companion to accompany him to town, though the latter was excited and frightened and wanted to take to the woods.

The injured boy ran down the track and across the trestles to town and to Dr. McCormac's office where his burns were dressed. His hands and wrists were both badly burned inside and out, and his feet and ankles were painfully blistered though protected by a good pair of shoes.

The little fellow displayed the greatest fortitude throughout. He has suffered intensely from his injuries, but is doing as well as could be expected.

These piles of burning slack are exceedingly dangerous, as they do not show that they are afire, but are like burning quicksand to any creature that blunders into them. E. G. Flanagan lost a good horse a year or so ago by inadvertently driving upon a pile of the stuff.
