...which fought so gallantly for Henry House Hill in sight of the whole army. The announcers gave the volunteers an example of "dying in your tracks," and but for an accident a handful of men might have turned the tide. All was going well in the battery. Regiment after regiment of Confederates had been repulsed. Finally a regiment and in order gray marched up on the flank, and just as Ricketts' numbers were about to be blown to pieces, the chief of artillery declared that the strikers were friends, and as some of the Federal troops were in gray uniforms the artillerymen held their fire. Battles are decided in a moment. The men in gray had the chance they were looking for and possessed the battery at close range, cutting down every cannoner and many of the horses. The lieutenant of the battery was killed and Captain Ricketts terribly wounded.

Then the battle raged over Ricketts' guns. Sherman tried to retake the hill. Colonel Cameron of the New York "highlanders" was killed while trying to clear the battery of enemies. The Confederate General Barlow had already been killed in a charge upon these guns, and it was there that Jackson got the nickname "Stone Wall." His brigade did not begin to flinch and was making a bold front on the edge of the field. Barlow led the Eighth Georgia against the hill and was repulsed. To steady his retreating men he pointed to Jackson's line and exclaimed, "There stands Jackson like a stone wall."

Slocum was wounded at Bull Run. He also had the unique sensation of reading his own obituary in the papers. Colonel Slocum of the First Rhode Island was killed, and the New York Slocum being among the wounded, the names were confused in the dispatches, and the home papers printed the usual laudatory notice of Colonel Henry W. Slocum. At the time he scribbled his friends from Washington to learn was done beyond the joke on the newspapers.

Slocum's regiment of New York volunteers stood well after losing their leader. It had already made the same mistake as Ricketts' battery and allowed a regiment in gray to march up and get in the first volley at deadly range under the belief that the strikers were friends dressed in gray. This confusion of uniforms led to frequent mistakes of the kind. Even the Confederate flag of that date was largely indistinguishable in battle from the stars and stripes, its colors being red, white and blue. After many changes the battle flag assumed by a mammoth red cross was adopted, and combatants were no longer in doubt as to who was who.

It all depended upon individual make-up how the moral phases of the Bull Run lesson struck home. There was a great cry for vengeance at first, but people calmed down to a sensible view and came to the conclusion that if the south had the best of the engagement it was only a stroke of luck, and the sensible thing to do was to go in and win the next time. The fighters of both sides who got together shook hands and exchanged compliments or congratulations, as the case might be. Prisoners and wounded were tenderly treated, and, in fact, the boys in blue and the boys in gray vied with each other in the effort to show regard for valor in distress. The relations of enemies and haversacks were shared, with the remark, "We were enemies on the battlefield, but now we are friends." There occurred a general relief among soldiers at the thought that war was not all enmity and there could be a cessation from killing, a chance to be human and Christian.

The refugees from Bull Run had terrible stories to account for their presence

Nearly Suffocated In Niagara Rapids

In the same boat in which he had previously made four successful trips down the rapids of Niagara river, Charles D. Graham recently made his fifth voyage. His last previous journey was made 22 years ago.

Graham got in the barrel at 8:30 o'clock at the old landing place of the steamer Maid of the Mist. The barrel had been standing in the sun all day having inspection by the thousands who had come to the falls to see the feat, and it was hot and uncomfortable when Graham entered it. The barrel is barely large enough to hold Graham in an upright position, and the only air hole is a tiny one in the top, the diameter of a man's finger. The best man who took Graham and his barrel out for the night were afraid of going too far for their own safety, and consequently did not put it in midstream. It drifted down as far as the cantonment bridge and then was caught in an eddy, which took it half way back to the starting place. It held in this eddy for 20 minutes, and Graham was rapidly growing exhausted from the heat and lack of air.

His trip was then reaching the exciting stage. Once in the rapids the passage was swift. It was three and a half minutes from the time the barrel struck the rapids until it floated into the whirlpool. The barrel was in sight of the many thousand spectators all the time except when waves washed over it.

Four swimmers were in the water 100 feet from the shore at the terminus of the voyage. The barrel was not carried into the dizzy maze of the whirlpool; but, striking it, reached the hands of the swimmers, and Graham was towed ashore and released.

Six Million Boxes a Year.

In 1895, none; in 1900, 6,000,000 boxes; that's Carcarets Candy Cathartic's jump into popularity. The people have cast their verdict. Best medicine for the bowels in the world. All druggists, too.

Earthquakes.

In 1901 the isles of Ischia and St. Eustachio suffered terribly from an earthquake, losing about 4,000 to 5,000 people. Ischia was again visited in 1883, but did not get off as easily as before, coming out of the wreck with 10,000 dead and maimed. The great calamity of the nineteenth century was the earthquake in Java in 1883, which is said to have killed not less than 120,000 persons.

Marconi Objected.

There was a little dinner once given to William Marconi, of which one incident is still remembered by some of the guests. An emotional member of the company, growing enthusiastic over a toast to the inventor of wireless telegraphy, made this climax to his peroration: "Gentlemen, I give you Marconi, the Frankish, the Parsifal and the Heliboth of Italy." When the toast had been drunk, the distinguished guest thumped the party for the honor and asked, "But I must protest against the action of the preceding speaker in making me triplets."—Lodge's Monthly.

Swindled.

"The saddest, most blighted life case I ever knew," said the major, "was that of a man who received a life pass over a new railroad."

"How was that?" asked the colonel.

"Why, the pass was issued by the railroad, and then the road was never built. He has felt awfully ever since."—Indianapolis Press.

All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH of the eye with powders, acid gases, salvarsan and drugs in paste form. They fail to dry up the mucous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the salvarsan have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pain and inflammation cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced oculist who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a treatment which is infallibly successful, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharge, and curing all inflammation. STORIES OF BULL RUN

SOME HEROES AND SOME OTHERS FORTY YEARS AGO.

The Battle Had Its Uses In Spite of Blunders—Great Men Who Were There—Work of the Cannoniers, Shots That Appalled the Yield.

(Copyright, 1901, by G. L. Kimes.)

ALTHOUGH Bull Run was fought 40 years ago, yet men who took their baptism of fire on that field are not at all scarce in a crowd of old soldiers. They are proud of the fact that they were there, and well they may be. Blunders occurred after Bull Run, blunders for less excuse and with no fortunate results whatever. Bull Run was good practice, good initiation and a valuable lesson. If a green soldier doesn't flinch in his first battle, it is no guarantee that he will not in the tenth and twentieth. It is not the hero of his imagination the first time under fire, if he wonders why he ever enlisted, if he braves disgrace and punishment in the rear steadily to get out of sight and hearing of the enemy who is looking for him—him distinctly and especially among 10,000 others as like him as two crows are alike—he is just the man for doing good ever after.

Foodrick the Great flew from the first battlefield where he commanded an army as fast as his horse could carry him. He put miles and miles between himself and danger, but even Napoleon took off his hat in respect for the courage of the great Prussian who on countless fields led desperate charges, the more desperate the better he fled it. Courage in battle is a strange thing. It has to be put to test, it grows in a man by exercise. The best teacher for individual courage is universal courage. The Bull Run troops had been told to keep up touch of elbow, to preserve order in the ranks, to be steady and await commands. Every precept was violated that day some time or all the time, and the army went to pieces, an awful example of want of training and discipline. Then the fellows who had enlisted for the fun of the thing kept on retreating until they crossed the Canada border or were hidden in the crowds of the great cities, the army being well rid of them. But the men of "aim," those who enlisted to see the thing through if they died for it, took the lesson to heart and went back to the A. B. C. of soldiering.

That was the day when the army schoolmaster took his lodging. A few officers, a few men, a few companies and a few regiments had stood with Spartan firmness until swept from their feet by the mighty torrent of panic stricken troops. The cool headed and brave spirits were marked for guides and teachers, and the army gave high or promise for the future in the day of its humiliation that it had shown while marching forward with music and banners.

Napoleon said, "I date from Rivoli," a battle by no means his first. Some of the great soldiers of the civil war might have dated from Bull Run had they cared to. There was a goodly company of them on both sides. Besides the leaders Johnston and Beauregard the Confederates had Stone Wall Jackson, Longstreet, Ewell, Early, "Jeb" Stuart, Wade Hampton, Fitz-Hugh Lee and others. The Federal roster included McDowell, Sherman, Burnside, Hunter, Howard, Fanning, Slocum, Hunt, Sykes, Keyes and Wadsworth.

One soldier who dated from Bull Run was General J. B. Ricketts, the arti-

BRIGHT WITH PROMISE.

A Mississippi Town Named After a Revolutionary Hero.

Civilization in the last century has come out of the chaos of forest and ignorance, and the Indian used to hold his porcupine nose stand the beautiful buildings of the Agricultural and Mechanical college, and on the site of the forest has sprung up Starville, named for General Stark of the Continental army.

When the Freeman-Rabbit treaty was concluded Sept. 30, 1830, a number of sturdy South Carolina farmers, eager to settle those lands were most fertile, chose Starville as their future home. They were well rewarded, for more fertile lands are not to be found in the state of Mississippi than one finds surrounding Starville. Its inhabitants appreciate this fact, offering, as they do, land free of taxation for a period of years to manufacturers seeking new sites for the manufacture of their goods.

There are at present more buildings going up in Starville than at any other time since its settlement. The superlative which is now in course of construction will cost a completion of $200,000 and will prove a decided ornament to the city.

Starville is also the home of the Agricultural and Mechanical college, an institution which is doing much good for the young men of the state. Two are called for the most admirable way in which this college is conducted. It is a noble institution, fitting young men for practical purposes in life. Here one finds every department favoring of the practical, which is so essential to the future success of the student. In the agricultural department the principles of stock breeding and feeding and the theory of drainage, together with the improvement of soil, is inculcated in the minds of the scholars. The departments of horticulture, chemistry, veterinary science, mathematics, mechanical arts and all of its other departments are conducted in that able way which demonstrates that the headmaster of each department is thoroughly conversant with his department.

The textile school building, which is model of its kind, is almost completed. In this new department young men and women are to be educated in the art of manufacturing textile fabrics. They acquire here a practical as well as theoretical and scientific knowledge of the art of manufacturing fabric and wool combines, including dyeing, desizing and drawing.

The machinery and appliances used in this school are the most modern procurable.

The state of Mississippi deserves high honor for the liberal way in which she supports this institution.

Starville also has two banks—the Second State bank, with a capital of $27,500, and the People's Savings bank, capital $35,000. She owns her own electric light plant and water works. There are also an ice factory and an oil mill. Well bleached cattle are shipped yearly from this point. The Missouri and Ohio and the Illinois Central railroads afford transportation and freight facilities which are unequalled at any point. All its merchants are rated well. With a good public school system and a healthful religious life the future of Starville is bright with promise.
