The Changed.
A Vienna paper relates an anecdote of the painter Makart, who was sometimes as taciturn as Van Moltke. One evening at a dinner he sat for an hour next to the soubrette Josephine Gallmeyer without uttering a word. Finally she lost patience and exclaimed: "Well, dear master, suppose we change the subject."

THE DAIRYMAN

With the old method of testing the cows with the churn mightily little testing was done on the average dairy farm, and the seven day test was about the only one known of, and of course we took the seven best days when the cows were in her best days, say J. W. Lighty in National Streetman. What good is that to the practical business dairyman? What does that cow do the other 243 days? In a few cases I know of she tried her best to get over the effects of the seven day test.

When we want to know how much butter fat is contained in the cow's milk and how many pounds of milk the cow gives in one year, not a day or a week when in flush on feed that possibly costs twice as much as the product is worth.

The method I use for testing dairy cows is not at all original with me, but is used by the foremost dairymen of the land, and from years of observation and experience I feel confident in recommending it as practical for all dairymen and farmers who depend on their cows for the main money crop.

I used three implements—viz, the scale, the Babcock test and the lead pencil. Weigh every cow's milk from year's end to year's end. Test twice per month and keep a strict account. When I purchase a cow to improve my stock, I would not give a cent for progenitors with a seven day test, but if that sire carries considerable blood of progenitors with good yearly tests I am quite willing to part with a liberal amount of fifty cents, and I know quite a number of dairymen who are of the same mind, and their tribe is increasing.

Bank Barns.
Bank barns are always damp and always dusty. Owing to their construction they never admit sunlight in quantities sufficient to be of any use. Sunlight is destructive to all forms of harmful bacteria. Therefore a stable properly constructed should admit the direct rays of sun to every stall if possible.

BALANCED OPERATIONS

If every dairy farmer will plan to make an effort to establish a seedling of alfalfa and try soy beans, cowpeas, Canada peas, crimson clover and any other nitrogenous plant suitable to his climate and farm operations, we shall see the beginning of the solution of the protein problem and a relaxation of the protein of commerce, says a Pennsylvania correspondent of Board's Dairyman.

Then the farmer who knows it is best and wisest to balance his ration will do so from the fullness of his own harvest. With the experiment station of New Jersey, where they do possibly a little guessing on practical farm matters as at any station in the country, authority for the statement that to six tons of alfalfa, almost equal to six tons of good wheat bran, were produced last season per acre, no progressive dairyman has an excuse for not having at least a trial patch of alfalfa.

Three tons of cowpea hay can be raised per acre on good ground, and if one must have meal to supplement the silage the cowpea hay may be ground into meal and make as much milk as its weight in best wheat bran. Ten tons of soy beans can be cut green to mix with the corn in the silo from an acre or from 20 to 30 bushels of seed harvested. This seed ground to meal will give about three times as much digestible protein as is found in the same weight of wheat bran and three times as much fat as in corn.

By devoting less range of pasture to the cows and practicing summer rolling, or, better, substituting the summer silo, a fair proportion of the land heretofore used for pasture can be utilized for the growing of some of these protein crops and next winter's ration not only be balanced, but the operation be performed without an undue unbalancing of the farmer's bank account.

Dairy Cow Rations.

Professor T. L. Haecker of the Minnesota experiment station after nine years' experience gives the following as to the best ration for dairy cows: Ensilage is the foundation feed used, and the grain feed consists of five parts bran, five parts cornmeal and two parts of 37 percent gluten meal, which contains 25 percent protein, and the rations are from five pounds to nine pounds of this mixture, according to the amount of milk given. It generally takes three pounds of ensilage and half pound corn fodder for every pound of grain feed. If a cow's flow of milk drops off for some cause or other, he increases it by feeding roots besides the grain for a time and then holds it by grain alone. Incidentally he mentioned a cow which failed to breed for four years which gave 300 pounds of butter fat the fourth year and seems to intend to keep up that gait.

Ration For Calves.

Flaxseed meal is now too high to be used for profit, says Professor W. A. Henry. A little gluten feed or gluten meal might be used instead. A mixture of one part each of bran, middlings and oats, by weight, should prove satisfactory. Determine the bulk of the feeds by weighing once and then mix by measure. Do not allow the feed to remain in the troughs between feeds, but have the young things clean up each allowance before the next is given.

Girl's Life Saved

By Human Toboggan

Miss Bethel Rawson of Demos, Or., recently was one of a party of 25 who started to make the ascent of Mount Hood. The climb to the crater is a desperate one.

At noon, when the party had reached a point 300 yards below the crater rock, a blizzard swept over the peak. Exhausted by the climb and overcome by the intense cold, Miss Rawson became unconscious.

Finally the great snowfield below the crater was reached. By this time the men had begun to fear that Miss Rawson would never survive the journey, and the need of getting her to shelter and warmth became every minute more imperative.

The party halted in despair. Then Professor McElfresh of Corvallis, Or., suggested that a sled be built out of a rough board on which Miss Rawson had been carried for a time and the heavy sacks in which she had been wrapped to save her from freezing. The suggestion was adopted at once, but it was soon evident that the sled would freeze to death unless shelter was reached. Below them stretched over a mile of unbroken snow, sloping swiftly down to the timber line, where safety lay.

Professor McElfresh then came forward with another suggestion. He proposed to make himself a human toboggan, to hold the girl in his arms, while he, stretched out and strapped to the plank, would make the attempt to coast down the mountain side.

As there was no other chance the party accepted the suggestion, dangerous as it was. Professor McElfresh, stretched at full length, was tightly bound to the board, ropes were rigged that he might have a chance to guide his toboggan, then Miss Rawson's unconscious body was strapped tightly down upon his prostrate form, feet to feet and body to body.

The other men pulled the toboggan on the edge of the steep, gave it a shove, and the man and girl shot out over the glacier and down through the snow.

When the timber line was reached, the professor, cutting himself loose, worked over the girl until the rest of the party made the descent. She was then taken to McMann camp, where she was soon revived and is now on the road to complete recovery.

Antiquity of Man.

From a review in Science of De Mortillet's great work on prehistoric times the following is condensed. Twelve chapters are devoted to the question of tertiary man. It is concluded that while man did not exist during this period, precursors of man more intelligent than any of the living anthropoids did exist.

Pithecanthropus erectus is considered as the immediate precursor of man. The Calaveras skull is rejected. The pleistocene period is considered as corresponding to the early quaternary, and 220,000 years is assigned as the length of this period. Add to this number 10,000 years for the protoblastic and neolithic periods and 6,000 years more for the historic period, and we have 238,000 years, which is, according to the authors, a moderate estimate of man's antiquity.

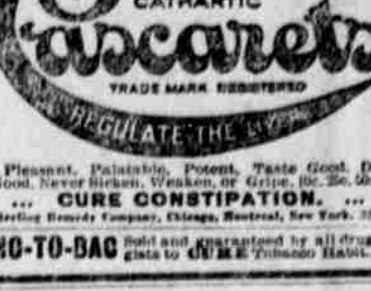

"Spellbinders" Warn.

"Spellbinding" is the happy name given to the platform speaking which plays such an important part in every campaign. The national chairman determines who shall be the stars in this department. An ex-president is most in demand, a speaker or an ex-speaker comes next as a rule, and senators and representatives are invited to speak in the order of their usefulness. One speech by an ex-president is worth half a dozen efforts by other men, though they may be more logical and eloquent.

The candidate himself, when an orator, will draw greater crowds than anybody else, but if he is wise he will let the national committee arrange his itinerary and schedule. Headquarters are always overrun with volunteers for the Cases of Queer Revenge. In England, where men have more than for everything, including revenge, some queer methods of playing even have come into the courts.

Albert Bewley of Leeds had a dog that howled at night. A naturalist next door did not like it, but had no legal recourse.

One day ants of the minute red variety began to overrun Bewley's house. Nothing that could be done headed them off. They grew worse and worse. He had made up his mind to break his lease and move when one night he heard a noise in his dining room. Slipping down, he found the naturalist emptying a bag of ants on the floor.

In court the naturalist paid damages, but he did it smilingly. Bewley, the late English violinist, was hard to beat on his perseverance against one who had incurred his ill will.

Bewley had a quarrel with a horse dealer named Brant. It was a trivial matter, but Bewley took the next house to Brant, set up a piano, bought a corset and proceeded to make insomnia for Brant.

After one or two assault cases in court Brant moved. Bewley bought out the next door neighbor's house, and he had made up his mind to break his lease and move when one night he heard a noise in his dining room. Slipping down, he found the naturalist emptying a bag of ants on the floor.

At a recent auction sale one of the paintings had for a subject a gayly attired golf golfer making a long drive. The bidding on this opened very brisk—$60, $65, $70 and finally $72.

"Seventy-two, two, two, two!" cried the auctioneer. "Forty!" shouted some one in the rear.

With the exception of the golfer in the front row, who immediately "ducked," the joke passed unnoted. "Four!" repeated the auctioneer. "Do I hear five?"

He did not hear "five," and a cold sweat broke out on the brow of the last bidder as now, for the first time, the possibility of having to buy that picture occurred to him. Seventy-four dollars for making a pun! He made a solemn vow then and there that he would never attempt another as with a sickly grin he thought of unpaid bills.

The attendant was standing at his elbow, the auctioneer had raised his hammer. "One—two—th—" "Five!"

The order was past. The auction proceeded, with the crowd unaware that the punner had received proper punishment.

For the benefit of those who do not play golf a diagram of the pun is furnished. "Fore" is the warning shouted by the players when about to drive—New York Mail and Express.

How Accidents Become Habits. As to our maniacs, says a writer in the Baltimore Sun, at first they are accidents, and afterward they become habits. It is singular how easy it is to convince a credulous public that a misfortune is a gift, just as an even trifling is a mark of genius. Your correspondent knows a lady who was asked in marriage by several gentlemen (for where one pastures others will follow), although she was neither beautiful nor clever nor rich, but because she was affected with a trembling of the lids. In her inmost heart she who addresses you believes the trembling began with nervousness, but it was universal, and after a little what was curious began to be regarded as fascinating. At any rate, I know a well established, portly lady, married to a man who secured her, not without difficulty, whose only sorrow is the necessity of keeping up the girlish habit which procured her a spouse. He is not a sentimentalist, but he wants what he paid for. He married her because her eyelids trembled, and not unnaturally he wishes to be possessed of the same treasure.

Not Entirely Alone. As he entered the car he saw at a glance that there was one seat with a young lady in it, and he marched straight down the aisle, deposited his overcoat, set down and familiarly observed:

"I entirely forgot to ask your permission." "That's of no consequence," she replied. "Thanks. Just arrived in the city, I presume," he ventured to remark as he glanced at the bundles and grips on the floor near by.

"Not exactly." "You're all alone, eh?" "Almost, but not quite. My husband is the conductor on this car, the motor-man is my cousin and my father and a brother are in the next back of us."

"Aw! Aw! I see," gasped the man, and the floor of the car suddenly became so red-hot that he lit out without another word.—Salt Lake Herald.

Mary's Bird. Mary had a little bird That once was full of song, And everywhere that Mary went The birdie went along. She did not keep it in a cage; There was no need of that. The birdie couldn't fly away; 'Twas tethered on her hat. —Chicago Record-Herald.

Nearly Suffocated In Niagara Rapids

In the same boat in which he had previously made four successful trips down the rapids of Niagara river Cur-Lale D. Graham recently made his fifth voyage. His last previous journey was made 12 years ago.

Graham got in the barrel at 3:20 o'clock at the old landing place of the steamer Maid of the Mist. The barrel had been standing in the sun all day inviting inspection by the tourists who had come to the falls to see the feat, and it was hot and uncomfortable when Graham entered it. The barrel is barely large enough to hold Graham strapped in an upright position, and the only air hole is a tiny one in the top, the diameter of a man's finger.

The boatmen who took Graham and his barrel out for the start were afraid of going too far for their own safety, and consequently did not put it in midstream. It drifted down as far as the cantalver bridge and then was caught in an eddy, which took it half way back to the starting place. It held in this eddy just 20 minutes, and Graham was rapidly growing exhausted from the heat and lack of air.

His trip was then reaching the exciting stage. Once in the rapids the passage was swift. It was three and a half minutes from the time the barrel struck the rapids until it floated into the whirlpool. The barrel was in sight of the many thousand spectators all the time except when waves washed over it.

Four swimmers were in the water 100 feet from the shore at the terminus of the voyage. The barrel was not carried into the dizzy maze of the whirlpool, but, striking it, reached the hands of the swimmers, and Graham was towed ashore and released.
