The gasoline schooner Copper Queen put into Astoria last Friday night to escape the storm that has been raging along the coast. She left Rogue river Saturday Feb 22 bound for Coos Bay with a cargo of Myrtle and other hard woods that were to be shipped from here to San Francisco.

As soon as she was at sea the storm sprung up which drove her, under bare poles, past Coos Bay and as far as the Columbia river where she was compelled to make the harbor of Astoria. Her cargo was shipped overland from Portland to San Francisco. In returning to Rogue river the Copper Queen will tow the hull of the small steamer Ro ue River which was built last summer in Portland, and which the Alliance tried to tow there but was not successful.

Narrow Escape of Four Young Men. Their Lives Saved Only by Their Agility.

Late Thursday night a little bird, carrying a camera under his arm and weary with long flying, came in at the back window of the COAST MAIL office. He had come all the way from Daniels creek to bring to the little daily a story of the hairbreadth escape of four young men, the flower of Hi King's logging camp, from destruction at the horns of John Clinkenbeard's blooded bull. The story runs something like this: Will Martin and Homer Ring were enroute to Marshfield. Dave Cowan and Billy Johnson volunteered to take the handcar and bring them down from the camp to the river where they could board the Coos River for town. The four accordingly started out but when they came opposite J. J. Clinkenbeard's place they found a great big bull standing in the middle of the track. As the boys approached on the car they tried to shoo him off, but he held his ground and made demonstrations to the effect that his foot was on his native heath and his name was McGregor. The car was stopped and a parley ensued which was cut short by the bull, who lowered his head and charged the works. Martin and Cowan deserted the car and swarmed up the two tall posts which stood on either side of a farm gate near by, but Ring and Johnson stayed with the car and started it back to camp making their escape unharmed. Then Taurus laid siege to the first two and in spite of their commands to "go lie down, sir," kept them tread on the fence posts for about half an hour. Then he tired of their company and went away. The other two who had been lurking in the background, again appeared on the scene with the car, and the party reached the river just in time for the boat. Our informant, who was sitting on a limb near by, took a snap shot at the scene and the picture is reproduced above.
