New Photographers

Speaking of Geo. W. Claxton, of Claxton & Parady, who are opening a photographic studio in the Beale building, the following (Mich.) Blade says:

"When George Claxton located in Unionville three years ago he found the photographic business in rather poor shape, his predecessors here having pursued such unbusinesslike methods as to cause the people to lose confidence in this class of work done at home. Mr. Claxton was a man of much experience, however, and knew he could win by giving the people first-class work at reasonable prices, and by following this rule he has won indeed, and is today doing a very large and satisfactory business. His gallery shows the well known faces of many of our best known people, and the work is beyond criticism. Mr. Claxton also does pastel, crayon and flashlight work and enlarging in a highly pleasing manner and carries a large stock of moldings and ready-made frames, the latter being the very latest designs."

Mr. Claxton also holds a letter from Fred W. Corbett, Michigan state lecturer of the Prohibition party, in which the following expressions occur: "Permit me to thank you for the fine photos which came today, and also to express complete satisfaction with the work. They are certainly the very best I have ever had taken. I showed them to a friend, and he thought them perfect. I certainly can ask for nothing better."

These are only two out of many unsolicited testimonials elicited by Mr. Claxton's work in the state from which he has come, and the people of this community will now have a chance to judge for themselves.

The opening of the new gallery will be held on Thursday, New Years Day, and all are invited to call and inspect the appointments of the most completely equipped photographic studio ever opened in this part of Oregon.
