Extraordinary Rat Letters

Professor W. W. Woodworth of the Harvard University, who has been studying rat behavior, has sent me the following extraordinary letter which will interest all rat fanciers. He has observed that rats will sometimes construct elaborate passages underground which are many feet in length and quite complicated. He also states that they will sometimes build nests and live in them for weeks at a time.

The rat has an incredible capacity for constructing underground passages, and this ability is not confined to rats alone. Professor Woodworth has also observed that mice and other small rodents will sometimes construct similar passages, and that these passages may be hundreds of feet in length.
