"TARIFF VS. TAX"

The Herald of Sunday treated its readers to a real article on the tariff question. We are glad to see this. The people have a right to know what the views of newspapers are on such all absorbing questions and the reasons that sustain these views. It quotes liberally from the New York Press to show that manufactured goods are as cheap and, in many cases, cheaper in England than in the United States. It does this for the purpose of meeting the demand made by the democratic party for cheaper clothing and other necessities of life. It says a common suit of clothes in England costs $7.50 and the same here. An all-wool $10 suit of American manufacture costs just the same in England. It says also that all knit goods, especially jerseys and the common grades of stockings and socks, are cheaper there than here. And that the price of blankets here and in England are practically the same. We do not admit the correctness of these prices, for if they are true foreign woolen goods could not be imported into this country at all. How could an importer import from England a suit of clothes that cost him $7.50, then pay the duty of $4.50 and the freight besides, and then sell it in competition with a similar suit of American make that costs $7.50. It cannot be done. Nevertheless last year there were imported over forty-two million dollars worth of woolen goods upon which, besides the freight, an aggregate duty of more than twenty-nine million dollars had to be paid. These goods of wool, wholly or in part, were sold in competition with the home product, a thing that could not, nor would not, be done if they cost as much in England as they do here. But for the sake of the argument out of which truth should come, we will admit that the Herald's prices are true. Then why the necessity of a duty at all on such goods? The whole superstructure of that "monstrous bundle of inequities and absurdities called the tariff law," as the Oregonian calls it, is based upon the idea that foreign goods are made much cheaper than our own, and the tariff is laid expressly for the purpose of compelling an increase in the price of the foreign article when placed upon our markets, in order that our home manufacturer may compete with the foreign article. But if the foreign article cost as much in the foreign country as our home article does, then of course no protection is needed at all. So that which ever horn of the dilemma the Herald chooses to take, it will find itself in an inextricable snarl. Its own statement of facts proves that there is no necessity for any duty upon the articles named.

The impression is rapidly gaining ground among working men that the head and tail of the republican ticket are too strongly tinged with devotion for the Chinaman and his welfare, on the part of Mr. Harrison, and invested interest in Canadian Pacific and Northern Pacific railroad stocks on the part of Mr. Morton. In addition to the fact that he has large interests in an English bank. Harrison, the railroad attorney and foe of organized labor, and Morton, the English banker, form a combination repugnant to the feelings and judgment of labor people.

A dispatch from St. Paul to the New York World, speaking of the democratic outlook in that state, says: "The feeling is general throughout the state that for the first time in twenty years the party has a chance of carrying the state. Reports from every quarter of Minnesota bear out this belief. The state is ripe for a political revolution. The position of the democratic party on the tariff is the popular one in Minnesota, and will get the votes. It only remains for the party to avoid internal dissensions and pull together."

A Republican of Brunswick, N. J., thus gives the attitude of his party: "For Premier and Lord Protectionists of Infant Industries, James G. Blaine, of Maine, the Uncrowned King, the Prince of Leaders, the Greatest Living Statesman; for Jassitor of the White House, B. Harrison, of Indiana."

To-morrow evening the bugle blast of Judge Thurman will be heard at Port Huron, Mich., and its echo will reverberate from hamlet to hamlet and workshop to workshop. The great mass of working people await with much interest the voice of the "Old Roman" raised in their behalf.

The Denver News estimates that Harrison is weaker by 3,000 votes in the state of Indiana than any other candidate seriously considered by the Chicago Convention.

The President and the republican Senate remind the public of two chess-players who seem to have forgotten whose move it is.

Mr Blaine calls a 47 per cent war tariff an "old landmark" which the Democrats are seeking to remove. The old landmark was a tariff of from 8 to 25 per cent. This satisfied the fathers of the American system and the projectors of "infant industries" for a period of more than fifty years. The original Morrill war tariff was only 36 per cent. The Democratic party is simply going back a step towards the "old landmarks."

Four years ago the Republicans raised the same cry as now, that Democratic success would mean a reduction in wages and ruin to business. The result has been that wages have been higher, work more constant and business more prosperous than for twelve years before.

In 1871 a Republican House, presided over by James G. Blaine as Speaker, voted to put both salt and coal on the free list. Eugene Hale and other Republican leaders urged them on. Did they seek to "ruin American industries?"

The Umpqua Herald, heretofore prohibition, comes out strongly for Cleveland, Thurman and tariff reform.
