A WOOLEN MANUFACTURER.

Some time since republican organs started the report that Archibald Linn, the great woolen manufacturer, of Portland, Maine, would vote for Harrison. On being interviewed he said:

"When the tariff was put on wool, our wool went down and has been low ever since, and if the duty on wool is removed I am sure the price will advance. A large class of people in this country wear and will have goods that can only be made of the fine wools grown in Australia and New Zealand and at the Cape of Good Hope. But because of the tariff on these wools, which cannot be grown in this country, they can only be bought at a price so high that our home manufacturers cannot compete with foreign goods. We have put up the bars and glutted the foreign wool markets with very cheap wools, enabling the foreign manufacturers to build mills and manufacture goods which are sent into this and other countries cheaper than we can manufacture them. For this reason manufacturers in this country have to tear up old woolen rags over and over again and in the endeavor to meet the foreign manufacturers in price have to bear down on the wool growers, and they are forced to shut down their mills because they have not cheap stock, while the foreign manufacturers can buy fine wool as cheap per pound as the manufacturers in this country have to pay for half shoddy and half cheap wool. Now, if the wools we cannot grow were allowed to come in free of duty we would be able to build more mills to make the fine goods that are so largely imported to-day. Millions of pounds of shoddy would have to go to the dogs and we should use much more wool."

The Alta has this pointed way of dishing up the fishery question: "Just as we expected, Mr. Blaine objects to having the British lion's tail twisted so it will hurt. Mr. Blaine's idea is that the lion's tail should only be twisted with a view to catching the Irish vote, and not with such rudeness as to disturb the lion. The 'uncrowned king' points out with truth that all his twisting has never caused the lion a moment's uneasiness, but that the moment Mr. Cleveland tried his hand there was a roar from Ottawa to Bombay. This, in Mr. Blaine's opinion, should teach us that the lion's tail should only be twisted by its friends."

A dispatch from New Augusta, Ind., says that Thomas J. Hudson, who has lately renounced the Republican faith, delivered an address before the New Augusta Bandanna club on "Tariff Reform," on Saturday evening. Mr. Hudson has been a life-long Republican, but upon a careful, close and unprejudiced study of the issues involved in this campaign, he acknowledges that the Democratic idea is the right one.

The Boston Journal is out with a wild wall that the republican "wheels must be greased," and James P. Foster is out with another letter in which he says "unless great effort is made in the next three months there is danger that Grover Cleveland will be elected. Give us means and we will do our duty." Evidently the protected manufacturers who "get substantially all the benefits of protection" refuse to put up.

Here, here, Mr. Powderly, this will never do at all. You mustn't tell folks that the men in the Pennsylvania mines wear brass tags on their belts and are known by numbers; that they live on pork and water, and sleep like pigs in a pen. Don't you know that the tariff keeps workingmen's wages up above the level of the pauper labor of Europe? For shame!

When a Protection organ will give the real reason why the wages of woolen weavers averaged $7.50 per week in Rhode Island and $24 per week in Utah, in 1880, it will tell the main cause of the difference in wages in this country and in England. And that cause is found in the demand for labor, and its supply, at any time and in any place.

Four years ago to-day the Oregonian said:

"Blaine will be elected if the prohibition vote of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa does not defeat him. Herein, according to the present outlook, is his only possibility of failure."

The prophecy was a failure as the prohibition vote in these states did not defeat Blaine, nevertheless he was beaten.

The importation of "foreign pauper laborers," not the importation of cheap foreign goods, is what drives down the wages of American workmen. The testimony before the Ford investigating committee in New York gives many conclusive proofs of this.

A dispatch from Beaver, Penn., says that George W. Dawson, a pronounced Union Labor man, who attended the Cincinnati convention recently in the capacity of delegate, has openly announced his intention of voting for Cleveland and Thurman.

We say, not only that the country has never been so prosperous and labor has never been so contented as under low tariffs, but that low tariffs have been the only tariffs with which the people have been entirely contented and have not asked for a change. We say, further, that if there were danger from a low tariff at all tariff at all in the present case, the amount of reduction under the Mills bill is so moderate as not to possibly affect the laboring man. The attempt to alarm him is purely political, and he will do well to remember the fact both for his own comfort and that he may not be moved to vote against his convictions by a mistaken idea of self-interest.

A dispatch from Bellefonte, Penn., says that Charles Price and his two sons have just come over for Cleveland and reform. He voted the Greenback ticket a few years ago, but before was always a stiff republican, and had declared his intention to vote the republican ticket this fall. His sons, who have just become of age, one voting the republican ticket last fall, will both vote the democratic ticket this year.

Robert and Clark Glenn, two old-time republicans of West Liberty, Penn., who have supported that party since its organization, and who are among the largest wool growers in Butler county, will vote for Cleveland, Thurman and reform this fall.

Michael Donahue, of Clinton, Ill., a life-long republican, spoke before the Waynesville, Tuscaroras (democratic) club Saturday night. Mr. Donahue says he is a republican on all but the tariff issue. His attitude creates quite a sensation in political circles.

Congressman Edmund Rice of Minnesota, says his state is alive for tariff reform, and there will be enormous democratic gains. He also believes that Congressman Knute Nelson will finally come out in support of Mr. Cleveland, in which event the Scandinavian vote would largely follow his lead.

W. Dayton Quick, a well known general insurance agent of Buffalo, N. Y., has voted the republican ticket for 22 years. He now says: "I intend to vote for Cleveland, Thurman and tariff reform if my life is spared until the 6th of November."

A dispatch from New Palestine, Ind., says that Ezra Eaton, a republican and ex-postmaster of Sugar Creek, has declared himself for Cleveland and Thurman.
