An Important Thing.

From the Linn County School Journal When the county court decided to remodel the court house they wisely em ployed a competent architect (one of the very best in the state) to make out the ins and specifications, and then employed him to supervise the work. They paid him five per cent of the contract price for his services, and no one can ustly criticise the court for this. They acted upon sound business principles. Why didn't they employ a farmer, or cost them less, no doubt. The reason is apparent. The nature of the service required a person skilled in this particular line of work—a person who makes this his study and gives it his best thought. The farmer, the blacksmith and the doc tor may have as much intelligence on matters, and far more in their special lines of work, but they are not fitted by education and occupation for the kind of service required.

Some people recognize the importance I spe cial qualifications for special sereducation. They seem to act in a man-ner to indicate their belief that anybody can teach school, or perform the duties principle of the thing offers the outrage. of county superintendent. For instance many people have the idea that the work of the superintendent is very light and unimportant. They fail to realize that the county superintendent has the supervision of the expenditure of more money toan all other county officials put together. Last year the amount passing under the superintendent of this county was about $60,850. To properly super vise the expenditure of this large amount of money each year is no small matter, It requires constant care and attention. It is astonishing how many ways of squendering this money are invented by the inventive brains of interested parties. Many times it is not guarded with that care and economy that it should be. If any one doubts this statement his doubte will soon vanish if he will call and examine the records. But to supervise the expenditure of the school funds is but one of the many duties de volving upon the superintendent. He has other duties requiring special preparation and experience, without which his work must inevitably be a failned

Would the supervision of the expenditure of $60,850 per year in business affairs, demand work and care? Does the building of court houses or the repairing of bridges, important as they are, deserve detter ability or demand more attention than the building of character in our boys and girls, the developing of their intellects and their training for citizenship? Should not the tax-payers money, used for educational purposes, be just as economically expended and as closely guarded as that used for any other purpose?

When we come to fully understand the importance of the work of education, and recognize the necessity of "Special qualifications and experience for Especial service," our schools will hold a higher place in the affairs of our county.
