When he went to Sodaville he was in a critical condition. Now he is fully restored to health, during his stay there gaining over 40 pounds.

Reception for Rev. McDougall.

The members of the M. E. church and friends, last evening tendered a reception to Rev. and Mrs. J. W. McDougall upon their return to the Albany church, a splendid expression of the appreciation in which the popular couple are held by the church people, as well as Albany people generally. During the evening an informal program was rendered, consisting of a piano solo by Gertrude Reeves, a vocal solo by Dr. C. V. Littler, an address of welcome by N. M. Newport, a response by Rev. McDougall, remarks by several present, a piano solo by Mrs. R. L. Burkhart and a reading by Miss Orah Harkness.

"On the Bridge at Midnight."

William L. Roberts, the author of many successes, never wrote one that more immediately and fully satisfied the public than "On the Bridge at Midnight." It has far surpassed his own expectations and consistently won enthusiastic praise. He set to work to write his best play and when Messrs. Klunt and Gassolo saw the possibilities of the bridge scene they decided to make it without a rival on the stage and did so. The result of the work of producers and author is a powerful drama, slightly but genuinely melodramatic without cheap sensationalism and scenically unforgettable. It is full of pathos, romance, fun and wonder. At Albany Oct. 10.
