Frenzied Thoughts.

At last Congress rose to the full height of one of its prerogatives, and actually had the courage to override one of President Roosevelt's vetoes. It is explained however, that it was done with the President's tacit consent. This proviso detracts somewhat from the heroism of the proceeding.

With a special committee of a Republican Congress investigating the currency problem and the Ways and Means Committee of a Republican House studying the tariff schedules during the Presidential campaign, it seems unlikely that the Republican campaign fund will be small or hard to gather.

IRRIGATION

In this Wet Valley is the Proper Thing

The Democrat has just received a pamphlet issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, office of experiment stations, giving the report of A. P. Stover, in charge of the government's irrigation works in Oregon, who has been experimenting the past year at this city on the farm of Howard and Cockerline. It covers the entire work of the state. Experiments in this valley have been at Albany, Corvallis and Hillsboro. Tables show the great inequality of rainfall in the valley, with hardly any in the summer and much in the winter. The average is given as 44 inches. At Albany it has ranged from 39.19 in 1905 to 52.94 in 1904, during 11 years having been under 40 inches 5 times and only over 45 inches four times.

He says of the climate: "Although in the same latitude as Montreal, the Willamette Valley, because of its proximity to that part of the Pacific coast which is washed by the warm Japan current, has an extremely mild climate. There are no extremes of either heat or cold. Summer temperatures rarely exceed 100 degrees and then only for a few days during the season. From 85 degrees to 90 degrees is the usual maximum temperature for summer. The nights are always cool. In the winter the thermometer sometimes goes as low as 10 degrees F., but never for any considerable period. Periods of mild temperature are frequent, and throughout most winters grass remains green in the meadows and pastures.

The general results of irrigation show an increase of 75 to 100 per cent in the product of land.

The following is the report of the Albany experiment:

"The experiments are being made upon a tract of land 1 mile south of Albany, and are to determine the value of both irrigation and drainage in bringing back to a state of productiveness land which has been abused for years in grain cultivation until it no longer responds to cultivation. The irrigation experiments here have as their primary object a determination of the value of irrigation on a dairy farm, it being the intention to show what can be done with the so-called 'worn-out' lands of the valley. A tile drainage system is now being installed by this office, which it is hoped will relieve the wet condition of the soil during the rainy season and put the soil in a fit condition for cultivation in the early spring. It is thought that by the growth of leguminous crops, by green manuring and by thorough cultivation the land can be brought back to a product condition. Water for irrigation will be secured by gravity flow and will be used to aid the growth of forage crops during the dry season.
