10,000 M. ON FOOT.

Norman R. Grantham, hitting on a $5,000 wager, from New York City, to Portland, Or., and return by way of New Orleans, from Aug. 22, '09 to Aug. 21, '10, arriving last evening, after a 29 mile hike from Salem during the day, by rail, and reported at the Democrat office. He is to enter a city without a cent and leave the same way, and neither beg, borrow or steal. On the way he had been held up eighteen times, swam a river or two, but had been well treated and had no hairbreath escapes. He averages about 31 miles a day.

He is a former wireless operator, a graduate of Ann Arbor and also attended Idaho University. As a wireless man he worked on the Atlantic for five years, and now has sixteen months off.

Among those he met on the way was Jack London the novelist, up in Butte, somewhat of an adventurer himself.

Grantham had long shoes with big nails in the soles, corduroy pants, etc., though he started with nothing but a paper suit.
