Tells About Albany.

A. A. Simpson, now a resident of North Albany, writes the Itemizer of Dallas, his former home, as follows:

There is on the west side of the river from Albany a low piece of land about one mile in breadth by four or five in length, which is used almost entirely for gardens and berries. The land is very productive, consequently pretty high, and is worth from $300 to $500 dollars an acre. It is on a portion of this land that another Dallas raised boy, Fred Waymire, and I have located. Albany is one of the most thriving towns in the Willamette valley. There is probably as many good buildings being built both for business and residence as any town this side of Portland.

The past season there was considerable street paving done with more under contract for the coming summer, and the roads are gravelled for several miles in all directions. Albany is a dry town. The citizens must be pleased that it is so, as the saloon element has had three trials and get worse beat each time.

Democrat Man Jabbed.

Harrisburg Bulletin: While at Albany last Saturday we met brother Nutting of the Democrat for the first time. He is a dandy little fellow, filled with good natured seriousness and fun. For 29 years he has made the Democrat "speak out in meatin'." The scars received in an effort of that magnitude are nicely healing since Albany has grown to that point where she has learned to give good care for its worthy editor. Here's hoping you may never have sense enough to quit the business, and that you may always have cents enough to keep at it.

The most important thing in a city is a high grade of citizenship, says a man in the Independence Enterprise. One would think money was the greatest thing to hear the average person talk.

A farmer wants the proposed increase on the postage of second-class mail matter defeated. He knows it will affect his interests, and it will, as well as the interests of people generally. Second-class postage should remain as it is in the interest of the masses.

It takes sixteen exposures to the foot to make a moving picture. Wonderful antics of men, baby buggies, etc., are created by stopping the machine and changing the location of the object, requiring great patience. These shows are said to have decreased the attendance at regular theatres 50 per cent, but the actors have been equal to the occasion, going into the moving picture story scenes.
