MISFITS.

This is an age of schemes, some good some bad.

The rain that helps the wheat injures the cherries.

The people of this valley are all neighbors and must shout together.

There is too much going on here to be affected by any slump in the east.

What has become of that porch light scheme, a good one that should be kept going.

Some people think the Nell Brinkley nonstrosities in the Examiner artistic affairs. So is Mutt.

A prominent commercial traveller has the slogan: Oregon Dry in 1910, and he isn't afraid to let people know it.

In case of war these aeroplane men could do some very effective work by dropping explosives on the enemy. Later; the enemy might drop them also.

Something will be doing now. The transcontinental railroads, that for years have been boosting California and Washington, have now turned their attention to Oregon. Whoopla.

According to the prize fight people those who are opposed to the slugging match and want it stopped are narrow and haven't good red blood in their veins. But they represent the best civilization just the same.

Albany's council has passed an ordinance prohibiting the throwing of oysters and tickling with feather dusters. The members of that council are evidently so old that they have forgotten the fun they used to have at celebrations and fairs, or so selfish that they would deprive the rising generation of the freedom they enjoyed in boyhood—Guard. No, the world is progressing and nuisances must go.

The Notes.
